

guable that her biggest big-screen success, both financially and comedically, has been "Mean Girls," which did great things for the former Lindsay Lohan and was also a perfect showcase for Fey, the trenchant observer of mores and mayhem. Her script was the best portrait of extreme girlhood since Amy Heckerling's "Clueless," and she brought a tart taste of adult reality to a tale of adolescent indulgence, playing the beleaguered teacher, Ms. Norbury.

It was an on-screen role that best defined Fey's off-screen persona, a kind of Greek chorus crying comically about the stunted adolescence of American society. As a potential movie star, however, Fey seems not only unsuitable but disloyal to the audiences that see her as a fly in the cultural ointment. It's an unlikely parallel, ad-mittedly, but she's like Edmund O'Brien's alcoholic publisher in "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," who is appalled to find himself nominated for Congress.

O'Brien: "Good people of Shinbone, I ... I ... I'm your conscience. I'm the still small voice that thunders in the night. I'm your watchdog that howls against the wolves. I'm ... I'm your father confessor. I ... I ... I'm, what else am I?"

John Wayne: "The town drunk." Tina Fey is a town crier, who doesn't howl or thunder. but cocks an eloquent eyebrow at the absurdities of contemporary life. Do we want such a resource absorbed into the system? People of Shinbone, do we want Tina Fey to be a movie star? Consider your options, and vote accordingly.

"I've never worked at a pace like this before," a harried-looking Fuqua said at his own edit bay near L.A.'s Miracle Mile a few weeks ago. "Six weeks of prep — that's kind of crazy."

Filmmakers were motivated by a belief that the moment was right for a story like this.

"These attacks are something that's in the collective unconscious, and Hollywood is responding," Eckhart said. Added Fuqua, "I think after Sept. 11 we realized something like this could happen; we came to understand how fragile we are.'

But the zeitgeist isn't always enough to sell one movie — let alone two.

"Olympus" has been tracking strongly ahead of its release, suggesting a hit, which could prompt audiences to see Sony's June film as, essentially, the "other White House movie.³

Even if "Olympus" performs poorly, it could spell worrisome news for Sony, suggesting there isn't the audience for West Wing shootouts that the studio had hoped.

On the other hand, "White House Down" has some arrows in its quiver. As a summer film from a director with a proven track record and one of the industry's largest studios, the movie will have more built-in awareness and marketing firepower. And "White House's" budget, estimated to be at least $150 million, is more than twice that of "Olympus," ensuring big special effects.

Each side is eager to emphasize their film's differences. Butler noted that Fuqua and Emmerich have vastly different directing styles. Emmerich said the films aren't as similar as they first appear.

"Theirs is a quite different movie — it's R-rated with a foreign threat, and ours is PG-13 and a threat from within," the "White House Down" director said. ("Olympus'" villains are a North Korean paramilitary group while "White House" focuses on homegrown radicals.) "There have always been two or three similar movies at around the same time. There's room for both," he added of the movie, which Sony has mostly refrained from marketing until after "Olympus" has cleared theaters.

FilmDistrict CEO Peter Schlessel said that he too saw a deep public appetite. "I don't think there's a lack of interest in the White House that people will be satiated by one movie," he said.

Sony marketing executives declined to comment. But in a sign that the studio has plenty of skin in the White House-destruction game — and perhaps can hedge its bets — it holds the DVD rights to both films.
