CARLSON

Recognition Award from Kansas State University College of Veterinary Medicine for advancing veterinary medicine and being a role model for future alumni as a professional and community-minded individual.

A gold axe on an engraved plaque was given to Carlson by the Crofton Fire Department in recognition of his years of service.

The evening of accolades and anecdotes also included the recollection of a sobering moment for the firefighters.

Crofton fireman Art Sufficol

recalled the Bogner Steakhouse fire approximately 10 years ago. A couple squad members, Carlson included, were trying to get a hose down the front hallway when a leak occurred and they had to pull out. Carlson was the last to get out only seconds before the roof caved in.

The squad knew God was watching over them that night.

"Those are the kind of things we do as volunteer firemen," said Sufficol. "It was easier knowing Doc was with us; it gave us a sense of security."
