SOUTH DAKOTA

GOP Gubernatorial Hopefuls Work To Establish Identities

BY CHET BROKAW
 Associated Press Writer

PIERRE — All five Republicans seeking to be South Dakota's next governor want to improve schools, boost economic development, limit government, avoid tax increases and balance the state budget.

And of course, they support ethanol production, wind energy, farming and ranching.

So how are Republican voters supposed to decide in the June 8 primary, when the party picks its candidate for the fall election?

In the campaign so far, each has promoted himself primarily with an image, an identity, instead of heavily touting a platform to create separation from the group.

Lt. Gov. Dennis Daugaard of Garretson describes himself as the experienced, compassionate business and government executive who used hard work to rise from humble beginnings.

Senate Republican Leader Dave Knudson of Sioux Falls calls himself Mr. Fix It, ready to solve any problem.

Sen. Gordon Howie of Rapid City touts himself as the tea party candidate, eager to limit government.

Former Brookings Mayor Scott Munsterman promotes himself as a business entrepreneur who balanced city budgets.

Rancher Ken Knappe of Buffalo Gap stresses his life as a cowboy, an outsider who can bring fresh ideas to the state Capitol.

The men have many similarities in their platforms, partly because of the state's budget problems, but also because of a widespread worry that the federal government is taking more power away from states, said Bill Richardson, chairman of the political science department at the University of South Dakota.

"Even though they're running for state office, they're also running in the mood of the nation nationally, the tremendous passions that have been generated by what's been going on in D.C.," Richardson said.

In ads and on their Web sites, the candidates deal with issues. But they also promote their images and their philosophies of government.

Daugaard, 57, considered the front-runner and backed by current Gov. Mike Rounds, has run ads describing his work ethic and his compassion for helping people. He said his strengths include growing up on a family farm, working his way through college, working in a bank and then spending two decades leading the Children's Home Society, which provides a home, education and therapy for children with emotional and behavioral problems.

Daugaard also spent six years in the state Senate before serving as lieutenant governor the past eight.

Knudson said he has a record of solving problems, first working as chief of staff for then-Gov. Bill Janklow about 15 years ago to put together a program that cut property taxes and changed the school financing system. He said he has sponsored more than 60 bills that passed during his eight years in the Senate and played a key role in balancing the state budget this year.

Howie, 60, said he has been a sponsor or co-sponsor of every bill supporting families or opposing abortion during his six years in the Legislature. He bills himself as the tea party candidate and voted against the state budget crafted by fellow Republicans because it increases state spending next year.

Munsterman, 49, stresses his experience as a chiropractor who also started two other businesses. He said as mayor and city council member, he had to balance budgets by cutting spending, not raising taxes. He also developed a regional development plan that included smaller communities around Brookings.

Knappe, 51, includes a Code of the West on his Web site, and he believes government should involve more people so it's not run just by insiders. He said as president of the South Dakota Stockgrowers Association, he learned how to bridge the gap between western ranchers and eastern farmers and city residents.

MIDWEST DIGEST

Nickname Supporters Say Issue Not Dead

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — Supporters of the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname and logo continue to hold out hope for its survival — even as the transition to a new moniker has started.

The state Board of Higher Education has voted to drop the nickname, but board president Richard Smith says the group would likely reconsider if the Standing Rock Sioux tribe votes in favor of the nickname in the next six months.

Standing Rock tribal member and nickname supporter Tom Iron of McLaughlin says he believes a vote will be approved soon. More than 1,000 people signed a petition for an election.

UND President Robert Kelley last week announced the formation of committees to help with the transition to a new nickname and logo.

Dad Of Miss Nebraska USA Killed In Accident

SCOTIA, Neb. (AP) — The father of Miss Nebraska USA has been killed in a farm accident about a week before her appearance in the national pageant.

Greeley County sheriff David Weeks says 55-year-old Harry Wright died Friday night when his skid steer ran into him, pinning him. Wright had been fixing fences on his land in Scotia when the accident happened.

Wright's daughter, Belinda Wright, was in Las Vegas in anticipation of the Miss USA pageant on May 16.

Her grandmother, Darlene Jensen, says she came back to Nebraska Saturday afternoon. She didn't know whether her granddaughter would still compete, although her family is encouraging her to do so.

Columbus Voters To Weigh City's Sales Tax

COLUMBUS, Neb. (AP) — Columbus voters will be asked Tuesday whether to keep paying the city's 1 percent sales tax.

Authorization to collect the local tax expires April 1, 2011. The city wants to extend it six years beyond, to April 1, 2017.

Officials say the extension is expected to raise about $3.3 million a year for streets, drainage and capital improvements.

The city also collects a half-percent sales tax to pay off bonds issued for a water park and aquatic center.

Hazel Man Killed In Crash Near Vienna

VIENNA (AP) — A Hazel man has been killed in a one-vehicle crash southwest of Vienna.

The South Dakota Highway Patrol identified the victim of Saturday's crash as 42-year-old Ronald Nielsen.

The patrol says Nielsen's SUV drifted into a ditch and he overcorrected, causing the vehicle to roll. Nielsen was thrown from the SUV and died at the scene.

Lasers To Create Digital Profile Of Rushmore

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MONUMENT (AP) — A laser-scanning project at Mount Rushmore National Monument will create a digital profile of the four presidential faces and other park features.

The three-dimensional scan using high-speed lasers is set to begin Monday and continue through May 21.

The collected data will be used for historic documentation and preservation.
