ON THIS DATE

75 YEARS AGO

Friday, May 17, 1935
 • The South Dakota Supreme Court today held the entire state liquor law, including the municipal sale provision, valid and not referable. The court ruled the law was considered an emergency clause.
 • Another star in the United States flag is the dream of the "western forgotten people" living in Oklahoma and Texas. They want to take 23 countries in northwestern Texas and form the 49th state of the Union. They would call it "Texlahoma".

50 YEARS AGO

Tuesday, May 17, 1960
 • Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev insisted today there can be no summit conference in Paris unless the United States apologizes and punishes those responsible for the U2 flight.
 • The State Public Utilities Commission has intervened in the application before the Interstate Commerce Commission for abandonment of rail service between Centerville and Yankton.

25 YEARS AGO

Friday, May 17, 1985
 • State regents want advice from a legislative committee and Gov. William Janklow on ways to solve a funding crisis that led University of South Dakota President Joseph McFadden to recommend the end of the school's nursing department.
 • Yankton College is expected to owe the federal government about $87,000 for violations of Title IV programs and another $300,000 from the mortgage on the Lloyd Library when the results of a federal audit are released, the college's attorney said Thursday.

Thank You

The family of Edward Kokesh would like to express our gratitude to everyone for their kindness, compassion, generosity, and sympathy during his illness and passing. The visits, phone calls, cards, gifts, food, flowers, plants, memorials, decorations and prayers from family and friends were all a blessing during this difficult time.

A special Thank You to the Hospice staff who were so loving, helpful, and caring; to Father Richard for his visits, spiritual support and inspiration during mass; and to Jim and Julie Jaeger and Chad Peters, for their compassion and guidance. Our family was very grateful to Jan Harmon, Jerry Wagner, Stacie and Jason Fredrich for the beautiful music.

Thank You to the American Legion/VFW for the graveside service and Altar Society who served the wake and funeral. Everyone did a great job!

Ed will always be remembered for stopping whatever he was doing to take time to visit and/or play cards. He would always make sure to plant plenty of pumpkins for the grandchildren; so when you are planting your pumpkins - think of Eddie. As he would say, "That's just the way it is."

ANIMAL

can provide special skills, talents and needs to care for that breed, and it is important for people to know that they are around to provide that help. The other aspect is so people understand that you don't always have to go to a breeder to get a specific type of dog. Maybe you want a specific breed but you don't want a puppy, then maybe you go to a breed rescue rather than a breeder."

While potentially making connections with future owners, the shelters and rescues don't let the animals they care for go to just any home.

"It is very important for shelters and rescues to ask the right questions," Anderson said. "We need to be sure people are getting an animal for the right reasons. It is our job to guide them and educate them by asking the right questions and giving them the right information on what to look for in an animal."

"I always give the example when I go educate young children: If your mom is taking you to soccer and your brother to baseball and your sister to dance every night, and your mom and dad both work and you all go to school, is a puppy really the best? Or would you be better off to start with a hamster? A lot of times, asking those right questions will help a family. And I think the breed rescues and the shelters like ours do a good job of that and try to fit the pet with the family looking."

Another component of any event hosted by the Heartland Humane Society is that it offers the opportunity to educate owners on the importance of spaying and neutering their animals.

"The thing that keeps shelters so busy is unplanned litters," Anderson said. "We get calls almost every day where someone has found a litter or has a litter they can't take care of. ... The fact is, there are just not enough homes for all of the animals. Even if a person can find homes for all of the animals that they have, you may be displacing another animal that is in a shelter somewhere. We just see so much of that. (That's why) spaying and neutering is a huge part of anything we do."

Because everything that the Heartland Humane Society does is donation-based, Anderson stressed that they are dependent on local contributions.

"While we have a great working relationship with animal control, the humane society does not receive any funding from the county or the city," she said. "We are not affiliated in any way with the Humane Society of the United States and we do not receive funding from any other source such as the United Way. We are funded strictly by the grants that we apply for and private donations. I want people to understand that while we work with these organizations, we do not receive funding from them."

Anderson said the society is currently sheltering 13 cats, with a litter of five more coming in, and four foster dogs.

That number fluctuates because animals are always coming in and being adopted. Anderson stressed that Heartland relies on people to adopt from the shelter in order to make room for the next wave of animals that need home.

FREMONT

needed to make up for what they see as lax enforcement by federal officials.

Opponents say it could fuel discrimination.

Jerry Hart, one of three Fremont residents who petitioned for the public vote, doesn't buy that. "The people they're dealing with aren't a race," he said. "You can't be racist to somebody who's not a race. We're dealing with illegals. Illegals are not a race."

He said the federal government isn't controlling immigration, so Fremont and other communities need local ordinances to protect jobs for legal residents and curb spending on education and medical care for illegal immigrants.

"A lot of people are looking at Fremont to see what's going to happen. In Nebraska itself, a lot of communities are waiting," he said, adding that he's fielded questions from residents in seven or eight other Nebraska communities, including South Sioux City, Columbus and Schuyler, who want similar laws there.

The Arizona law empowers police to question people about their immigration status if there's reason to suspect they're illegal immigrants and makes it a state crime to be in the United States illegally. It takes effect July 29 unless implementation is blocked by court injunctions requested under several pending legal challenges. Critics say the law could lead to racial profiling.

If the measure passes, city officials anticipate lawsuits will follow.

"Other cities that have passed nearly identical ordinances have been sued almost immediately," said Fremont Councilman Gary Bolton.

That's why the city has been hesitant to put the measure to a vote. The special election was supposed to be held last summer. But it was stopped after the city raised concerns about the constitutionality of the measure, then asked a court to stop the process before the city went to the expense of holding the election. The city lost in district court and appealed to the state Supreme Court.

Last month, the Nebraska Supreme Court said it wouldn't
