said, "but only if you also helped others. She was of course right."

His mother, Michels said, "made me who I am today."

Michels was born in Pierre, grew up in Vermillion and was elected South Dakota's 38th lieutenant governor last November. He has a long-standing history as a member in the South Dakota State Legislature representing District 18. He was also a partner in the Yankton law firm Michels & Associates, Prof. LLC, and served as general counsel of Avera Health.

Michels earned a nursing degree and bachelor of science degree in health services administration from USD. He also earned a juris doctor from the USD School of Law in 1985. Following law school, Michels served as an officer in the United States Navy, and married his wife, Karen Lindbloom, a native of Pierre. They have a son, Collin, current president of the USD Student Government Association.

He told the audience that none of the positive accomplishments in his life would have been possible if his family had not been "embraced by a community, and cared for by a community. A community of compassion, a community of service, a community of inspiration."

Michels said that when societies are examined from their native, historical backgrounds, there is a common, powerful theme: Selfless service to others is expected.

"Great service creates a great society, and we are all indeed a product of such service, given by others."

MATT MICHELS

He noted that Lincoln said that public service was a critical ingredient to self-governing, and even though self-governance was a grand experiment, his words resonate today. It was a theme that USD's renowned political science professor, Dr. W.O. Farber, carried forward, Michels said, when he asked, "What have you done to lead? What have you done to inspire? What have you done to improve your community?"

The lieutenant governor noted that Farber states, in his testament to students, "I believe that dedicated public service is the noblest of professions. The keys to a happy, acceptable and productive life are participation, involvement, and above all, concern for others."

"Great service creates a great society, and we are all indeed a product of such service, given by others," Michels said.

As USD's 1,290 graduates prepared to accept their diplomas in a moment that Michels described as "a pinnacle in your lives," he made a special request.

"I challenge you to, please, desire to inspire," he said. "Desire to inspire yourselves and others in public service, by your actions in volunteering, supporting your neighborhoods, churches, schools, and economic development activities."

planned the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks that killed nearly 3,000.

"We don't know who or what that support network was. We don't know whether there might have been some people inside of government, people outside of government." He said the United States wanted to investigate further to learn the facts, "and more importantly, the Pakistani government has to investigate."

Some members of Congress have called for a cessation of U.S. aid to Pakistan, at least until it becomes clear what role, if any, the government played in bin Laden's ability to avoid detection for years. But Obama said that since the Sept. 11 attacks, "Pakistan has been a strong counter-terrorism partner with us" despite periodic disagreements.

The president was guarded in discussing any of the details of the raid, and offered no details that have not yet been made public.

Discussing his own role, he said the decision to order the raid was very difficult, in part because there was no certainty that bin Laden was at the compound, and also because of the risk to the SEALs.

"But ultimately, I had so much confidence in the capacity of our guys to carry out the mission that I felt that the risks were outweighed by the potential benefit of finally getting our man," he said.

Two influential lawmakers rebutted calls for a cut-off in American aid to Pakistan, an inconstant ally in the long struggle against terrorists.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said: "Everybody has to understand that even in the getting of Osama bin Laden, the Pakistanis were helpful. We have people on the ground in Pakistan because they allow us to have them."

"We actually worked with them on certain parts of the intelligence that helped to lead to him, and they have been extraordinarily cooperative and at some political cost to them in helping us to take out 16 of the top 20 al-Qaida leaders with a drone program that we have in the western part of the country," he said.

"We do not rejoice in the death of the man named Osama bin Laden (but) ... truth provides a platform for justice," he said.

Church member Angelia Parker said bin Laden's death should have been a time for contemplation, not cheering in the streets. "I think that was kind of weird," said Parker, who was passing out roses to mothers after the service. "It was like, 'Are you kidding me?' We are celebrating this person's death? We didn't celebrate in the streets when Saddam Hussein was killed."

The Rev. Bill Kelly, priest at Saint Mary of the Assumption in Dedham, Mass., near Boston, said he was taken aback by the celebrations because he detected blood-

National security adviser Tom Donilon said, "I've not seen evidence that would tell us that the political, the military, or the intelligence leadership had foreknowledge of — of bin Laden" being in the country. He said the U.S. has asked the Pakistani authorities for access to people whom the SEALs left behind in the compound, including three of bin Laden's wives. The U.S. also wants access to additional materials collected there, he said.

Officials have said the SEALs took voluminous computerized and paper records when they choppered out of bin Laden's compound. Donilon likened the amount of information retrieved to the size of a small college library.

Donilon also sidestepped when asked if waterboarding and other so-called enhanced interrogation of detainees had produced information that led to the successful raid against bin Laden's compound. "No single piece of intelligence led to this," he said.

The national security adviser appeared on ABC, NBC, CNN and Fox. Lugar was on CNN, and Kerry spoke on CBS.
