Researchers: Ocean Garbage Gyre Impacting Sea Life

Though plastic debris is giving the insects places to lay eggs, scientists are concerned about the manmade material establishing a role in their habitat.

"There are reasons things happened (in the Legislature) the way they did," he said.

Given the time crunch before the primary, Tuesday's forum in Tyndall may be the best — and only — chance for area residents to meet the District 19 GOP candidates in one setting, Jerke said.

Jerke hopes organizers likewise will sponsor a forum in the northern part of District 19, providing those voters with a chance to meet all of the candidates.

The westward shift into District 21 features a couple of challenges for Bon Homme County, Jerke said.

No Bon Homme County residents have filed for a District 21 legislative seat, meaning the county won't have voice on that delegation, he said. In addition, the large district means a Winner-area legislator would live about 130 miles from Springfield and could have little contact or familiarity with Bon Homme County, he said.

Jerke sees the shifting population from the state's rural areas to larger cities as something that has happened over time.

With rural legislators covering wider districts, both the lawmakers and their constituents will find it more challenging to meet face-to-face, Jerke said.

That's why Tuesday's forum in Tyndall provides such an important venue that should benefit everyone, he said.

"I plan to have another one of these forums for the general election," he reassured the audience.

said Scripps graduate student Miriam Goldstein.

The finding will be published online Wednesday in Biology Letters, a journal of Britain's Royal Society.

Goldstein led a group of researchers who traveled 1,000 miles off the California coast in August 2009 to document the impacts of the garbage on sea life. For three weeks, they collected marine specimens and water samples at varying depths, and deployed mesh nets to capture plastic particles.

Loans

Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, who is retiring after citing excessive partisanship in Washington, voted "present."

The Democratic bill would keep interest rates for subsidized Stafford loans at 3.4 percent for an additional year, rather than doubling automatically for new loans starting July 1. It would have no impact on current loans.

A 2007 law approved by a Democratic Congress gradually lowered the rates but pops them back up to 6.8 percent in July because lawmakers were worried about costs.

Stafford loans are for low- and middle-income students. The Education Department projects the measure would affect 7.4 million undergraduates borrowing money in the year starting July 1.

Republicans oppose the Democratic plan to pay for the bill by forcing high-earning stockholders in some privately owned corporations and professional practices to pay additional Social Security and Medicare payroll taxes. Even if it passed the Senate, it would have no chance of emerging from the Republican-controlled House.

Democrats reject the GOP version, which drums up money for the extension of low rates by abolishing a preventive health program created by Obama's 2010 health care overhaul. Republicans are demanding a Senate vote on their measure but it cannot pass that chamber, and the White House has threatened to veto a House-passed bill that uses that same funding mechanism.

Both sides know they can push no student loan bill through Congress without a bipartisan consensus on paying for it.

You are hereby notified that at the sale of land and lots for unpaid taxes by the County Treasurer of Yankton County, South Dakota, the aforesaid real property situated in Yankton County, South Dakota, was first offered for sale at public auction to competitive bidders. Not having been sold for want of bidders, said County sphere by herself. For the entire state of South Dakota, perfect scores were received by 51 students in reading, 214 in math and 16 in science. Kitchenmaster said she didn't expect to have a perfect score, let alone two.

"You can't really prepare for the Dakota STEP test," she said. "When I got done, I felt good about it. I didn't think it went too bad. It was pretty cool to see (the scores), and we got letters from the governor this spring.'

Kitchenmaster was recently honored among the top 1 percent of South Dakota high school students during a luncheon in Pierre. Gov. Dennis Daugaard presented certificates to each student.

"Being in such a group made you feel special," she said.

Andes Central counselor Randi Ozanne felt bad that only one of her students could receive the state recognition.

"I contacted Pierre, desperately asking if we could send both students, and they said. no, just one, and to use test scores," she said. "Jenna had a little better test scores (than Esteben), so we sent her to the governor's luncheon."

Showing she's not perfect, Kitchenmaster settled for a 35 — just missing the highest possible score of 36 — on her ACT college-entrance exam.

The first time I took my ACT, I got a 32. My English and reading were good, but my math and science weren't as high, so I decided to take it again," she said. "You can take the ACT multiple times, but it's a different test each time. On my second try, I received a 35. Rodriguez was right behind his classmate with an overall ACT score of 32. He scored 35 in English, 34 in reading, 32 in science and 28 in math.

In addition, he took three online courses - two Advanced Placement classes in physics and calculus, along with one class of Spanish III — that loaded him up with more courses than there are periods in the Andes Central school day.

Rodriguez sought the additional classes for personal and professional reasons.

'I really wanted something that would push me. Ålso, I want to become an engineer, and I felt that I may be behind when I started college if I did not have (an advanced) background in physics and calculus," he said.

"I took the Spanish III course because it is part of my heritage. I also feel that it is important as the world becomes more globalized to be bilingual.

Rodriguez said he didn't originally plan to take eight courses, along with an advisor period. However, he wanted a heavy academic load and the ability to take courses not offered at Andes Central. Along with another student, he asked school officials to introduce an AP program.

"I definitely didn't want my workload to be easy," he said. "Senior year is no time to slack off.

Rodriguez admits he's not the most organized person but manages his time well.

tor co ege because Lalready deal with the course load I will have," he said. 'Also, I will be more prepared when I enter my freshman courses on the background subjects.'

"I think the AP courses will help prepare

While hoping to become an aerospace engineer. Rodriguez also wants to pursue music on the side as a vocalist and percussionist.

While finishing in a tie for their class's top academic honor, Kitchenmaster and Rodriguez see themselves as friends more than competitors.

We are in all the same classes. If either of us need help, we go to each other," she said.

He agreed, adding that they motivate each other.

"We are supportive of each other and respect our place at sharing the spot at the top of the class," he said. "I have to admit, however, that knowing that she will do well encourages me to continue to do well to make sure I keep up with her.'

They credit their small class sizes and teachers' one-on-one attention as an important factor in their academic success.

'We have only 18 kids in our class, which means if you have trouble with anything, the teacher is there to help you," Kitchenmaster said.

The co-valedictorians noted their parents — Bill and Dawn Kitchenmaster and Edward and Dawn Rodriguez — played a key role in their academic success.

"My father is the elementary principal, and my mother is a pre-school teacher. I think they encourage me just to do my best, Kitchenmaster said. "My parents are always good at helping with school, and they helped with reading when I was little.

Rodriguez also credited his parents with their support.

"When I was younger, my parents always pushed me to do better and always helped me in my work, even when it took hours," he said. "Since then, I have become very independent. They no longer worry about my grades because they know I keep them up. So yes, they were very important to my success.

While they tied for valedictorian honors, Kitchenmaster and Rodriguez show very different personalities, Ozanne said.

"Jenna is a lot more introverted. You will see her sitting there and reading a book. Esteben is more outgoing," the counselor said. "Jenna is more into music and the fine arts, while Esteben has also been in sports.'

However, they have meshed well and have been good for Andes Central, Ozanne said.

'To have two (students) in one class like them is really neat, and they help each other out," the counselor said. "It's really great to show how a small school can have incredibly talented students and go to Pierre to meet the governor.

"Jenna and Esteben will continue to achieve when they get out of (high school)."
