Mount Marty To Present Genome Findings

The Mount Marty College Division of Natural Sciences' Seminar on the "Interpret a Genome" program will be held at 3 p.m. today (Friday) in SLC 107 on the Yankton campus.

It was announced in November that Mount Marty College's Natural Science Division has expanded its collaboration with the Department of Energy's (DOE) Joint Genome Institute (JGI) through the formation of the South Dakota Genomics Consortium. MMC students have been annotating the gene functions of their assigned bacteria Sphaerochaeta coccoides (S. coccoides) strain SPN1. The "Interpret a Genome" program provides students in colleges and universities with access to recently sequenced microbial genomes selected as part of the DOE JGI's Genomic Encyclopedia of Bacteria and Archaea (GEBA) project. The students annotate the genomes in the context of their own classwork, gaining hands-on knowledge.

The DOE is particularly interested in the MMC microbe since it ferments different carbohydrates and produces ethanol, acetate, and formate as the main fermentation end products. Thus, this microorganism could possibly be used in the direct bioconversion of cellulose-containing wastes to fuel such as ethanol or it may harbor enzymes with potential biotechnological applications.

Mount Marty College students in Dr. Vicki Geiser's Cell and Molecular Biology course have been learning how to annotate the function of genes in the MMC genome this semester. These students will present their initial and continued findings of the "Interpret a Genome" program at the Division of Natural Science's Seminar today on MMC's Yankton Campus in the Scholastica Learning Center (SLC-107). The public is invited to hear the students' research results and to discover more about bioinformatics and Mount Marty College's microbe, Sphaerochaeta coccoides strain the work "Under The Shadow Of His Wings" and the Sacred Heart Monastery history book.

I did research and went way back," Henrickson said. "I found some wonderful stories, even before there was a motherhouse in Switzerland."

"Everlasting Is His Love" actually begins in 1528. A shepherd boy, Zumbuel, approaches a burning fire of religious artifacts conscated from the houses of worship in the village of Haslital,

"This shepherd boy saw the fire and pulled a statue of Our Lady out of the fire," Henrickson said. "He fled into the mountains and placed the statue in a maple tree, and it became stuck in the tree. It would not come out (for the boy). When people went to check it out, they built a grotto and the statue was able to come out. The villagers considered it holy ground."

Three centuries later, the site - Maria Rickenbach — would become the site for the Benedictine $\,$ Sisters' motherhouse. Henrickson's narratives resume with the motherhouse's founding, leading to the eventual relocation of the Benedictine Sisters to Yankton.

Without the motherhouse, we wouldn't have our house here (for Sacred Heart Monastery and Mount Marty College)," Henrickson said.

The narratives include early stories about Bishop Martin Marty, the first bishop of the Diocese of Sioux Falls, and Mother Jerome Schmitt, prioress of Sacred Heart Monastery and the first president of Mount Marty MMC events coordinator Wyatt Yager will narrate Sunday's concert, Henrickson said.

"I have known Wyatt from when we were both back in Sioux Falls, and Wyatt was manager for the Orpheum Theater and its playhouse," Henrickson said. "Wyatt just has a huge gift for this (performance). We knew we needed a narrator for this commissioned work, and I just thought that Wyatt would do really well."

The cantata is written for choir, brass choir, mezzo-soprano, baritone, piano and percussion. The work will feature the MMC mixed choir, the Mount Marty Choral Union, instrumentalists from Yankton and the surrounding community, and a vocal soloist and pianist from the University of South Dakota.

The work was commissioned and funded by Peter and Catherine McGovern, Mount Marty College, Sacred Heart Monastery and a grant from the South Dakota Arts Council.

The concert will be conducted by Kenneth Tice, chair of the MMC music department and director of MMC choral activities. In an earlier Press & Dakotan lasting Is His Love" has been a work in progress. "Composing a large, multi-interview, Yarbrough said "Ever-movement work was no small task," he said. "I began by selecting a series of texts and choosing which of my performing resources I would use for each movement. Composition began after approval of the texts by Mount Marty's anniversary committee.

Three movements were written during summer 2009, Yarbrough said. The anniversary committee approved the works and urged him to finish the piece according to his outline. The work was finished in fall 2011. The score, parts and performance practice compact discs were presented to MMC President Joseph Benoit in early 2012. Performance of the work was moved to this Sunday because of a change in MMC choral conduc-

Yarbrough and Tice have twice discussed the work over coffee. They are excited about the possibility of the composer and MMC choir working together.

Yarbrough likes what he has seen of Tice's work.

"I first saw Kenneth Tice conduct at Mount Marty's 2012 Vespers concert," he said. "I knew, from watching him conduct and hearing his choirs sing, that my work was going to be in the hands of an exceptional musician who really knew what he was doing.'

Yarbrough said he appreciates Tice's willingness to take input.

"Doing so allows me to participate in seeing the work come to life, a process which is always exciting," the composer said.

In a earlier Press & Dakotan interview, Tice said he believes the 75th anniversary piece will provide a challenge. The MMC choir has been working on the piece for months.

"Stephen Yarbrough's composing style is very interesting," Tice said. "It's harmonic, and you have to think vertically. The (MMC) kids are used to melodic and horizontal. It's an interesting approach to voice and instrumental."

Henrickson said he feels great excitement seeing the cantata come together. In writing the nar ratives, he has learned so much more about Mount Marty College and the Benedictine Sisters.

In turn, Henrickson wanted their stories to come alive for the audience.

"I just enjoyed reading about the places and the people. I tried, as much as I could, to be true to their stories," he said. "I decided to begin with this story of the shepherd boy in 1528 because I just found it an interesting connection. Working with the narratives has made me just love this place so much more.'

March

"The Feimer family is a great example for what the March of Dimes does to help people."

The mission of March of Dimes is to improve the health of babies by preventing birth defects, premature births and infant mortality, Willson said. In addition to promoting research in those areas, the organization also offers support and education to families.

That support was instrumental during the Feimers' struggles, Katie said, as both her sons needed to learn to eat, gain weight and recover from jaundice in the neonatal intensive care unit (NICU) at Avera McKennan Hospital in Sioux Falls.

'They provided us with a lot of information about what to expect," she said. "They also had a person at the NICU we were at that would just come in and visit with the families and make sure that your questions were being answered. They also organized different things for the mothers to pull us together so you could see you weren't going through it alone. They also had mothers there of children who were out of the NICU so you could see that people do survive the experience and the babies can do well afterwards.

Today, Luke is an active 4year-old and Jacob is a busy 21month-old, Katie said.

"They are both doing great," she said. "Neither of them have any lasting effects from being born premature. We are very fortunate.'

Katie said her family is honored to be named this year's ambassador family for the March for Babies, and they are all looking forward to Saturday's event.

"It should be fun," she said. "It's our fourth year doing it, and it's always a good time.'

Registration for the March for Babies begins at 9 a.m. at the Riverfront Event Center, with the 3-mile walk starting at 10 a.m. The event offers food, music and games for children.

The 2013 March for Babies is sponsored nationally by Kmart, Farmers Insurance Group, Macy's, Cigna, Sanofi Pasteur, Famous Footwear, Actavis, Mission Pharmacal and United Airlines. Local sponsors include First Dakota National Bank, Shur-co, Sapa and Lewis and Clark Specialty Hospital.

Willson encourages everyone to attend the event, which will raise funds for a variety of March of Dimes programs.

"With help and support from Yankton, we can do our part to make sure babies in South Dakota are born healthy," she
