Neswick Signs With MMC Golf

Bishop Heelan golf standout Robbie Neswick will attend Mount Marty and play men's golf for the Lancers, the institution announced on Tuesday.

Neswick won both the Mighty

Neswick

Mo' Meet (74) and Sioux City, Iowa, city championships (75). He was also honored as all-Missouri River Conference honors in 2011 and "Robbie will be a great addition here at Mount Marty Čollege. He is exactly the kind of student athlete we look for in our program, committed to both athletics as well as academics making him a great fit for Mount Marty College," said Lancers golf coach, Tom Schlimgen.

In addition to all Neswick's golf accomplishments he was also recognized for many academic awards including being a member of the National Honor Society. Gold Honor Roll four years in a row and Fine Arts Student of the Year in 2012.

Neswick, the son of Mike and Judi Neswick of Sioux City, Iowa, plans to major in Accounting at Mount Marty College and will be receiving a Merit Academic Scholarship and a Catholic Leadership Award in addition to his golf award.

USD Tennis Adds Three

VERMILLION — University of South Dakota head tennis coach Malcolm Gilreath is pleased to announce the signings of Dragana Brankovic (Frankfurt, Germany) and Ana Jelena Vujosevic (Monza, Italy) to national letters of intent. Gilreath also announced that Rymma Maslova (Kiev, Ukraine) will transfer to USD from University of Nevada.

"We are excited to welcome Dragana, Ana and Rymma to the program," said Gilreath. "They are great people who can make a difference at USD both on the court and in the classroom. In terms of tennis, they will contribute immediate depth throughout our lineup

Brankovic is 123-43 since 2004. She has international playing experience and has been successful in Germany at both the regional and national level. She won the EU Cup in 2012 and has experience playing in ETA/ITF tour-Vuiosevic was born in Monza, but resides in Bar, Montenegro, and is a Montenegrin citizen. She started playing tennis at the age of six, was coached by Gianluca Pozzi, the only Italian to have played in the quarterfinals of Wimbleton, and spent three years at Niki Pilic Tennis Academy in Germany. Vujosevic was ranked as high as No. 2 in Montenearo (U18). Maslova made her way to Las Vegas, Nevada, at the urging of her tennis coach and father, Victor. She enrolled at the No Quit Tennis Academy where she received instruction from Adam Carey. She has spent the last two seasons at Nevada where she has compiled eight wins in singles play and nine wins in doubles play.

The trio ioin a program that finished 16-11 overall and qualified for the Summit League Tournament in its first season of eligibility.

nitely after he punched a referee and broke his jaw. And at hockey's Under-18

World Championships in Estonia last month, a Lithuanian player hurled his stick at a referee, hitting him in the upper body. 'Part of this isn't a sport problem, part of it is a societal problem," said Dan Gould, director of the Institute for the Study of Youth

Sports at Michigan State. "You watch TV, and the trash talking that's accepted. If you're famous, you're almost supposed to get into trouble. Why is everyone infatuated with Lindsay Lohan when she seems like a spoiled brat? Added Barry Mano, the founder and president of the National Association of Sports Officials, "We've become so loud and so brash. It's about me and about being in the spotlight. All of those things play out in the games we play. Part of the beauty of sports and youth sports in particular has always been its power to educate and transform. To instill in athletes skills and values they can use for the rest of their lives, in arenas that don't have hardwood floors or boundaries outlined in chalk. Talk to any CEO or other successful person, and odds are he or she can trace the lessons they learned about teamwork, fair play, leadership and overcoming challenges back to Little League, Pee-Wee football or some other youth sport. But just like passing, dribbling and hitting, those skills don't come with the uniform and the practice schedule. They have to be taught and reinforced by league administrators, coaches and, of course, the parents who signed their kids up for a team in the first place.

'Most Americans really want their kids to learn values through sports. And research has found we can teach kids to be good sports and enhance their moral development through sports if it's done correctly," Gould said. "But the big myth is it just happens.' Even referees and officials can do a better job, Mano said. Watch any college basketball game, and odds are you'll see a

Mano said, yet it's almost never 'We've softened too much by coach not only stalking the sideline but coming onto the floor to protest a call. That's a violation, letting bad behavior go escaped,' he said. It may not seem like much. But add up all the little transgressions that have been overlooked or excused, and sports now has a big problem. "I really believe in the power of sport for changing people," Gould said. "But it's not going to happen if we just hope it happens. We need to train coaches, and the leagues need to be organized and have pretty defined rules of what's tolerable and what's not tolerable.

'You also need to recognize good sporting behavior," he added.

It's not just about fixing the prob-

The U.S. Anti-Doping Agency has developed a "True Sport" campaign to help parents, coaches and administrators return the emphasis in sports to the life lessons that don't show up in the won-loss column. The program includes educational materials, codes of conduct and good behavior pledges, and the approach is individually tailored for athletes in elementary school, middle school and high school. In the Netherlands, the Dutch FA responded to Richard Nieuwenhuizen's death with a "Respect" campaign targeted at players of all levels.

And at i9 Sports, sportsmanship is valued so highly there are weekly rewards for it. The recreational youth league, which has programs in 280 communities in 28 states, designates a specific value of sportsmanship being a good buddy, humility, leadership — for coaches to emphasize each week. At the end of the week, the player on each team who best exemplified that value gets recognized. Parents also have to pledge to display good sportsmanship, and not use negative or derogatory language with officials, coaches, other parents or kids. They also pledge to keep fun as the main emphasis of the league. We believe there's great value in competition, healthy competition," said Frank Fiume, founder and CEO of i9 Sports. "But learning how to win with grace and lose nored for too long, McCabe said. With devastating consequences. Four years after he was assaulted, McCabe still gets migraine-like headaches every day, has limited hearing in his left ear and has lost his sense of taste and smell. Yet he continues to referee - "I just love doing it so much" hoping he can instill lessons of sportsmanship with the coaches and players he encounters.

That's a lesson that's been ig-

But he wonders if it has any impact. Though his assault was big news in Rochester when it happened and again when his attacker was sentenced to 10 years in prison, McCabe sees the same poisonous behavior everywhere he goes. At a state championship football game he worked recently, one of the coaches complained constantly and threw his clipboard. At a boys lacrosse game, McCabe heard a coach tell one of his players to "bury" an opponent.

"Every time I try to talk to somebody I hit a brick wall," Mc-Cabe said. "Unless something's done in this country, it's going to happen again," he said. "Until we teach kids how to play and respect officials, it's going to happen again.' AP Sports Writers Tales Azzoni
