DAILY DOSE

Daily opinions from the P&D Sports Staff on local and national high school, college and professional sports.

By the end of this week, will we be talking about a new head men's basketball coach at Mount Marty College?

It sure looks that way.

The athletic department and college administration have been moving rather fast in their search to replace long-time coach Jim Thorson, who retired last Monday. He had been coaching the Lancers for 18 seasons, a tenure that dates back to 1995. So yeah, it's been a while since Mount Marty has been in the market for a men's coach.

Athletic director Chuck Iverson said last week that the college had advertised the position internally and already had interested candidates. The next question will be: Does Mount Marty offer the job to one of those in-house names or does it extend the search outside of the school?

That's not a question for me to answer, but I would bet good money a new coach is announced by the end of this week. As Iverson pointed out, the quicker you move in a search like this, the better — from both a consistency standpoint (a long delay would not bode well) and a recruiting standpoint.

Whether 'quicker' necessarily means you find the best candidate is not for me to say, but it would appear that Mount Marty has qualified candidates already in Yankton. That could mean current assistants or other faces from other sports in the department, but whomever takes over will have some big shoes to fill.

And a significant challenge in front of them. But that's what makes this an interesting search; it's a chance for Mount Marty to take the next step forward.
