

A Little Out Of Breath...

On the outside, the slim young University of Sioux Falls blonde whose soon-to-be-married name appears on the cover of her first work of fiction, "Another Ending," appears calm and collected as she shares details of her first whirlwind publishing experience. On the inside, Sara Watt-Whitley is still a little out of breath, just beginning to realize how quickly she's advanced in the world of fiction.

May 28, 2013, is the scheduled release date for Sara's paperback version of "Another Ending," which deals with the rape and abortion experience of a young woman. Pre-orders are available through Sara's website: www.sarawhitley.tateauthor.com. The Kindle version is available now through Amazon. Her second book, a continuation of the first story, is in the process of being published and she's writing the third book which will complete this three-book series.

"I've always had an interest in being published," Sara acknowledges. "I was a sophomore at Yankton High School when I felt God was directing me to write about abortion. That's where the first stirrings of this story line began. But I had no desire to pursue an English degree. I have known for a long time that I want to help others recover from traumatic experiences. A degree in social work will allow me to do that."

At Yankton's Calvary Baptist Church, Sara's former youth pastor pressed her to write skits and plays for several years for the church's youth group. Her engaging stories prompted fellow church members
