YCL Seeks Volunteers For Reading Program

The Yankton Community Library is in need of teen volunteers to help with the summer reading program. Teens able to donate 5-20 hours per week in June and July are encouraged to volunteer. Volunteers are needed to help put together art kits for young children, count reading minutes, stamp booklets, stock and hand out prizes from the prize cabinet, and help supervise large group activities. If you are interested in applying as a volunteer, contact Becky Pittenger at bpittenger@sdl.net, call the library at 668-5275, or stop by the library at 515 Walnut Street. For more information, contact the library at: 668-5275.

Residents Reminded To Care For Lawns

Lawns are greening up, and the hum of lawnmowers can be heard all around the Yankton community. Overgrown grass and weeds aren't just unsightly; they're a violation of city ordinance. Lawns, boulevards and ditches must be maintained at 8 inches or lower and free of noxious weeds. Weeds must be cut or chemically treated. Dandelions are not considered a noxious weed, so while they maybe "obnoxious," they are not "noxious." Residents are urged to mow their lawns before it gets more than 8 inches tall and treat or cut noxious weeds. For more information, visit cityofyankton.org or call 605-668-5251.

ON THIS DATE

Friday, May 20, 1938

Rain or shine there is one record sure to go down in the books at the conference track meet tomorrow. It can't help but be a record because it will be the first time the event (Relay of Fat Men) has been run. This contest of speed and exhibition of the century will be a fat man's race to be run as an added attraction. Yankton college's biggest and bouncing athletics will don the short pants for this race.

In a most pleasing program held last night at the Masonic Temple, Frank Bramble, of Watertown, presented to the postoffice department and the Yankton postoffice an oil portrait of his father, Downer Tenney Bramble, first postmaster of Yankton. Bramble stated that his father was not only the first postmaster of Yankton but was the first merchant, the first wholesaler, the first miller and the first freighter, as well.

Lashing, fire-building, knots and nature study will be the techniques stressed at an "all-day" outdoor training session for Girl Scout people this Wednesday, May 22. All troop leaders and day-camp personnel of the Yankton Girl Scout Association will meet at the city hall at 9:15 a.m., and leave for a day's outing at Cottonwood Island.

Sioux Falls has had its sixth "bomb" scare in less than two weeks. The latest note was found Friday afternoon in a restroom at Fantle's department store. As did other notes found in various buildings in the city, it claimed bombs were planted and would go off unless money was left in the room.

First Dakota National Bank of Yankton is rearranging its offices now that the purchase of American State Bank assets and assumption of liabilities is complete.

State officials are taking steps to provide drought services, such as a hay auction in northeastern South Dakota, that were suggested by farmers and ranchers, Gov. George Mickelson said Thursday. The governor said he has directed state officials to follow up on suggestions the farmers and ranchers presented at a meeting two weeks ago.

conservative groups and the Justice Department's seizure of Associated Press phone records as part of a leak investigation. "The hardest thing in the hot house of Washington in weeks like this is to get above the maelstrom and really define major issues in your own terms," Axelrod said. "They need to find big platforms, whether it's congressional addresses, commencement speeches, high-profile interviews or a combination of those things and others." As these Democrats see it, there has been an arc of Obama addresses that have spelled out the challenge and the hope of attaining the American Dream, from a 2005 commencement address at tiny Knox College in Galesburg, Ill., to his speech in Osawatimie, Kan., in late 2011, and that the time for another one is now. Over the last two weeks, Obama has been trying to draw attention to his job-creation ideas with small events in Austin and, on Friday, in Baltimore. The daytime visits have been coupled with modest executive initiatives that tend to garner local media attention but get lost in Washington's attention to the contentious issues of the moment. "There does seem to be a risk of getting bogged down in noise," said Jared Bernstein, who was part of Obama's economic team when he served as Vice President Joe Biden's chief economist. "He doesn't need to get out to talk about Benghazi and the IRS and the budget deficit. He needs to talk about investment in the nation's productivity." Obama has called for more government spending on education, public works projects, and research and development and has proposed paying for it largely with higher taxes. But after letting one tax increase on the rich pass at the beginning of the year, Republicans have steadfastly refused any further tax hikes and have resisted Obama's spending plans. The result has been a fruitless search, at least so far, for a "grand bargain" to trim the nation's long-term debt. In the face of Republican-led investigations in Congress and with some conservatives even suggesting impeachment proceedings against the president, some Obama advisers say that boldly elevating the economy would create a sharp contrast and emphasize their belief that Republicans are overplaying their hand. They note that as dissatisfaction with Washington has grown, Obama has continued to hold a substantial edge over the Street and no longer needs Second Street as a traffic bypass for the project. According to Larson, the committee is essentially recommending that the commission proceed with the master plan created by Omaha planning consultant Marty Shukert in 2007 after a community input process. "There just needs to be some tweaks to it six years later to incorporate new ideas," he told the City Commission recently. A request was made by the committee to obtain Shukert's services to update the plan, design it and get cost estimates. "I thought we were far enough along in the ideas that have been pitched, talked about and discussed that we didn't really need to go back to the drawing board in the form of bringing Marty back," Commissioner Charlie Gross responded. "I thought what we were looking for with the task force was, 'Sifting through these (Shukert plans), what do you want the commission to do next?'" It was asked whether the committee, along with city staff, could finalize the plan without Shukert's assistance. Sommer said he believed city

Republicans in Congress. House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said that creating jobs is the top priority of Republicans, too, but "we're also focused on holding this administration accountable" about what happened in Libya and with the IRS. If Obama has a single long-term governing priority, it is a deep-seated belief that advances in technology and globalization have translated into a significant consumer benefits but have also eroded middle-class gains. "The result has been the emergence of what some call a 'winner take all' economy, in which a rising tide doesn't necessarily lift all boats," he wrote in his 2006 book, "The Audacity of Hope." The opportunity to make a broad shift toward the economy might have presented itself this week, when the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office predicted that the budget deficit for 2013 will be $642 billion — lower than estimated and half of the record $1.4 trillion hit during Obama's first year in office. Instead, that bit of news was overshadowed by the IRS, Benghazi and AP phone record controversies. Armed with a lower deficit number, some of Obama's liberal critics say he should abandon efforts to reduce deficits and focus exclusively on jobs. "They should declare victory," said Lawrence Mishel, staff could probably do the final design and engineering work. However, he said the committee thought it might be easier for Shukert to do it. He would know the plan and have the resources to edit it more so than city staff, Sommer stated. "I don't think there is anything wrong with getting a scope of services from (Shukert)," Commissioner Dave Carda said. "If it comes in way too high, we can see if we can do it in house." No official action was taken, but the consensus of the commission was to wait for a pro-president and CEO of the liberal Economic Policy Institute. "Making the big policy and political project the grand bargain has been digging us in a deeper and deeper hole." White House officials say the time to pause and deliver the type of major address that connects Obama's policies to his core beliefs is when it has the possibility of making a major impact. For now, they say, their economic tour across the country is better suited to the moment. "What we think that these tours do is add another dimension to the argument of what we're trying to get done with Congress," White House communications director Jennifer Palmieri said. "That this is not just about budgets, this is about steps that Congress can take legislatively and the president can take unilaterally that will create jobs and help middle-class families." How to emphasize Obama's jobs agenda was a subject Thursday during a meeting between top White House aides and outside Democratic operatives, many of whom had worked for Bill Clinton's administration. They had been called by Obama chief of staff Denis McDonough to consult and offer ideas on how to respond to the most recent upsurges. Among those attending were such Clinton aides as Paul Begala and Mike McCurry.
