The Yankton County state's attorney's office had been prosecuting the case, but it has been turned over to state officials. The attorney general's office generally takes on such cases when there could be a conflict for the state's attorney, according to AG spokeswoman Sara Rabern.

Seitz was originally scheduled to appear May 8, but his appearance was postponed twice. The first postponement was because of a scheduling conflict for Bern. Then, another postponement was granted in the proceedings, moving the initial appearance to Wednesday.

Seitz has been suspended indefinitely

"We thought that by teaming up with them, our proceeds will go to help several local causes," he said. Hanson said the United Way was honored to be selected for the benefit. "They're a fun organization with a great group of people," she said. "We're really excited to host them." A contact sport, roller derby features members of two teams skating in the same direction around a track. During the short matchups, or jams, each team designates a scoring member, the jammer, who scores points by lapping members of the other team. Team members try to help their own jammer while stopping the opposing jammer. "These women are athletes," Westra said. "You will see this on Saturday, whether they are pushing back the opposing team or skating full speed jam after jam. You'll see that they are fit."

In his presentation, Showers warned his audiences to avoid contact with any wire. The Bon Homme-Yankton wires carry 7,200 volts, far more powerful than the 120 or 240 volts that enter many homes, he said.

"Electricity is always looking for a path to the ground, and you don't want to be the link between the power and the ground," he said. "If you see the wire on the ground, stay away from it."

Even underground lines contain dangers, Showers said.

"More and more wires are underground, which is good. But you have to know where (it's safe) to dig today," he said. "Call 911 if there is a medical emergency. Call 811 before you dig."

At the machinery display, Hunhoff and Kronaizl talked about loader safety, rider safety, power take-off (PTO) safety and lawn mower safety.

The two men stressed cardinal rules for machinery: Never touch it, stand on it or lean over it. And beware of slow-moving machinery, because you don't know if it will turn and, if so, in which direction.

Youngsters should even be wary of flying debris from nearby equipment, such as lawn mowers, the men said.

"We stress the right way of getting things done," Hunhoff said. "These kids may even go home to their parents and say, 'You're not doing it the right way.'"

Wednesday's camp was fun and educational for the kids, Hunhoff said. However, the lessons learned can also prove vital in an emergency, he said.

"Today, we had kids who saw something and said, 'It could hurt you but not kill you.' But we have had people who were killed in accidents," he said. "We're trying to do something to prevent accidents. If we save one person, this is all worth it."

Brasel taught safety of another type, allowing youngsters to see animals such as Mr. Nibbles the rabbit, Rose the chicken, Ozzie the Doggie and even horses.

"We try to get to kids that many animals are OK, but if you meet someone else's animals, you should ask (before petting or handling them)," she said. "We also teach kids to always wash your hands with soap and water after touch animals."

Inside the 4-H building, Kurtenbach showed simulated examples of how quickly grain can collapse around a person. He showed the speed in which grain pushes against the person, leaving him unable to move or even breathe.

"You guessed it would take 2 minutes, but it was more like 9 or 10 seconds before someone was buried up to his head in grain," he told his young audience.

Kurtenbach showed methods, such as a rescue tube, used for extracting a person from a grain pile or silo. However, the best advice is to avoid the accident, he said.

"Stay out of the bins and off the grain piles, or you may get trapped," he said. "And stay away from equipment unless there is someone there to help."

In her work with a hospital emergency department, Gehl sees all sorts of farm accidents. "You see grandpas with their 2-year-olds on the tractor, lawn mower or four wheeler," she said. "Then they hit a bump, and the child goes flying. I have seen too many of those situations."

Gehl was dismayed to see the large number of youngsters at Wednesday's camp who admitted they rarely — or never — wear a helmet, seat belt or other safety equipment. Wednesday's farm safety camp addressed the kind of hazards that are unique to farms, Gehl said.

"I work with a lot of animal (cases), such as a bull that may charge you. It's even part of our trauma criteria (at the hospital)," she said. "Around here, you have everything from lawn mowers to barbed-wire fences to construction sites. You come across different things in rural areas, things that you don't find in a city environment."

so they could report the payments as a tax benefit. Chaumont disputed that assertion, saying the department believes the benefits were tax-exempt.

Foley said the department fully cooperated with his audit. In previous years, he has accused the department and other state agencies of trying to stonewall his staff.
