Arens

participant costs are covered by the Fulbright Summer Institute.

Arens said he is looking forward to experiencing a new culture and learning more about a topic he has studied extensively on his own. He hopes to gain more information about the U.K.'s climate change policy and the policies the U.S. could adopt to reduce its carbon footprint, he said.

"Global climate change is something I want to understand and make sure other people realize the facts behind it, and not the propaganda that's been going around that it's false," he said.

The Fulbright Commission selects its participants through an application and interview process that examines academic excellence, extracurricular and community activities, ambassadorial skills and desire to further the Fulbright Program.

A 2013 graduate of Yankton High School, Arens participated in debate, band, student council and the Young Democrats while at YHS. After being elected president of the National Honor Society (NHS) and vice president of his senior class, he organized school-wide community service projects, required NHS members to tutor struggling students and helped organize graduation.

Arens is entering his second year at USD, where he is a double major in chemistry and Spanish with a minor in mathematics. He is also an amateur pianist, a member of Chemistry Club and College Democrats, and vice president of the Honors Association.

While he is uncertain of his future academic plans, Arens said he knows his educational experience this summer will serve him well going forward. "(Climate change) is going to be a major problem facing the whole world in the next couple decades," he said. "So I think no matter what, it will help me wherever I go."

Wal-Mart Settles With Cantaloupe Victims

DENVER (AP) — Wal-Mart said Tuesday that the company has agreed to settle claims from many of the families of victims who died in a 2011 listeria outbreak that killed 33 people and was traced to a Colorado cantaloupe farm.

The company settled with 23 families, including nine in Colorado, said Bill Marler, the families' attorney. The terms of the settlements were kept confidential.

Wal-Mart spokesman Randy Hargrove said the company is "committed to our customers' safety and we take food safety concerns like this very seriously."

Hargrove said Wal-Mart stores in Colorado and other states removed the contaminated cantaloupe from the produce department as soon as the company learned of the outbreak, but some relatives said the company did not react fast enough.

Two Colorado cantaloupe farmers pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges stemming from the deadly outbreak and were sentenced to five years of probation and six months of home detention. A federal magistrate also ordered brothers Eric and Ryan Jensen to each pay $150,000 in restitution and perform 100 hours of community service.

They pleaded guilty last year to introducing adulterated food into interstate commerce.

According to federal regulators, conditions at Jensen Farms caused the outbreak. Investigators said the melons likely were contaminated in the farm's packing house because of dirty water on the floor and old, hard-to-clean equipment.

Sasse

mont meatpacking plant who had raised no money and not actively campaigned.

Dinsdale had hoped to follow a similar path to the nomination as U.S. Sen. Deb Fischer two years earlier. Fischer, then a little-known rancher and state lawmaker, defeated two statewide office holders en route to the GOP primary victory before defeating former Democratic Sen. Bob Kerrey in November.

Trailing far behind the other three candidates on Tuesday's ballot were Omaha lawyer Bart McCleay and Fort Calhoun businessman Clifton Johnson.

Sen. Mike Johanns, a Republican former Nebraska governor, is vacating the seat. He was elected in 2008, after serving as secretary of agriculture under Bush.

Sasse, president of Midland University in Fremont, began a heavy round of introductory advertising in January. The early effort to identify himself helped, especially when Osborn, a former Navy pilot, accused him in advertisements of supporting elements of the Affordable Care Act, overwhelmingly unpopular with Republicans.

Osborn had won statewide election. Sasse benefited from more than $1 million in spending from outside groups. It seemed the race was setting up to be a two-candidate sprint to May 13.

The campaign's deteriorating tenor bothered The Omaha World-Herald's editorial board, who endorsed Dinsdale. He also poured $1 million of his own into his campaign recently.

Of the state's 1.1 million registered voters, about 550,000 are registered as Republicans. Of the rest, independents outnumber Democrats.

Last month, campaign officials estimated about 200,000 voters would vote in the primary. Spray said the campaign intensity of the past few weeks has driven those expectations higher. "I think turnout is going to be bigger than people expect," Spray said.
