USDA Delays Whole Grains Rule For School Pastas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department will allow some schools to delay adding more whole-grains to meals this year, responding to criticism from school nutrition officials and Congress that the standards were too difficult to put in place.

The delay comes hours after a Republican-led House spending panel criticized the Obama administration's healthier school-lunch standards and proposed letting some schools opt out of them entirely.

USDA said schools can put off for two years a requirement that pastas in schools be whole-grain rich, or more than half whole grain, if they can demonstrate that they have had “significant challenges” in preparing whole-grain pasta. Many schools have complained that the whole-grain pastas don't hold together well when cooked.

“Schools raised legitimate concerns that acceptable whole-grain rich pasta products were not available,” said Kevin Concannon, USDA undersecretary for food, nutrition and consumer services. “We worked to find a solution which will allow more time for industry to develop products that will work for schools.”

and bond rating. What is outlined above is doable and responsible if the County Commission wishes to move forward and offer this proposal.”

Moore said the plan is a rough draft, but he believes it is something the Planning Commission can use as a basis for a recommendation.

At its meeting last week, the Planning Commission tabled discussion of a TIF plan for the grain facility because it didn't feel it had enough direction from the County Commission or Dakota Plains on how to proceed.

Dakota Plains is currently looking at potential sites in Bon Homme and Clay counties and plans to select a location for its facility June 26.

Commissioner Allen Sinclair questioned the value of giving direction to the Planning Commission when it is unclear if Dakota Plains is even interested in Yankton County anymore. The company has not responded to communications from Planning and Zoning Administrator Pat Garrity.

Commissioner Donna Freng agreed.

“I don't think we have to express interest in (Dakota Plains coming to Yankton County),” Sinclair added.
