From P&D Staff Reports

Yankton County's road infrastructure will once again be the main focus of Tuesday's meeting of the Yankton County Commission.

The commission will hear an update on the status of Fleeg's Bridge as well as discuss a county transportation plan.

Commissioners will also discuss issues with noxious weeds and hold two executive sessions.

The commission meets at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in the commission chambers at the Yankton County Government Center.

County Rail Meeting Moved To Wednesday

From P&D Staff Reports

A meeting to discuss a proposal for establishing a Yankton County regional rail authority that was originally planned for Monday has been pushed back to Wednesday, May 6.

Commissioners and other interested parties will be on hand to discuss the matter with the public.

The meeting is set for 7 p.m. and will be held in the commission chambers at the Yankton County Government Center.

National Prayer Day Breakfast May 7

The public is invited to attend Yankton's annual National Day of Prayer Breakfast, Thursday, May 7, at Calvary Baptist Church, Yankton.

The breakfast begins at 6:30 a.m. and will end at 7:45 a.m. Pastor Jeff Mantz of First Assembly of God Church will facilitate prayer time beginning at 6:45 a.m.

To assist in the planning, organizers are asking that reservations be made in advance. You can place your reservation with your pastor or designated leader in your church, or you can contact Calvary Baptist Church at 665-5594, by Tuesday, May 5.

The annual National Day of Prayer ceremony will be conducted at noon on Thursday, May 7, at the Yankton County Government Center (north side), 321 West 3rd Street. There will be more than 20 different prayer leaders at this event. Come when you can; leave when you must. In case of inclement weather, the noon event will be moved into the Yankton City Gym, at 416 Walnut Street.

from shallow aquifers.

"When talking about a public water supply and letting a large CAFO go in, something could go wrong and then the system is lost," he said. "What is the need? I guarantee somewhere down the line the system will have to be replaced. Leaks will happen."

Chairman Jay Bottolfson questioned Gilbertson about what was being allowed in other counties. In particular, he wanted to know if there are counties that do allow large CAFOs over shallow aquifers.

"Most, if not all, strongly discourage that kind of development," Gilbertson said. "However, you need to remember that zone B is the water supply that will be needed 5-10 years down the road."

Bottolfson also noted that the proposed change from the large, medium and small categories to align with the states Class A, Class B and Class C, is causing confusion and suggested that instead they keep the original designation with the state classification in parenthesis.

Other issues discussed included:

- That the cap does not violate any laws;
- That the state's attorney is still researching the setback issue because timing could be an issue and could cause administrative difficulties;
- The fact that the board doesn't have a current zoning map, because it is being completed now to show the well head protection areas, and the current map goes by parcels which doesn't reflect the different zones.

One of the board members questioned how an item that had originally been requested as a clarification became removal and changing of the ordinance.

"There has to be a good reason for the change that is shared by the community" Bottolfson said. "It is our job to reflect the wishes of everyone. If many oppose the cap, why choose that option?"

He also noted that he understands the need for the cap to rise due to the economics of scale on what farmers need to be able to operate in order to make a profit.

Board member and County Commissioner Travis Mockler said his primary concern was with the limits on dairy operations.

"The dairy number needs to be removed," he said. "Maybe we need to consider keeping the cap but allow variances where operators can prove they know how to operate a clean operation and they can then expand to say that 7,000 cap."

Currently, dairy operations are capped at 3,200.

"Dairy operations are not coming here because they can't make it work here," Mockler said. "If they can prove they can do a good job and want to expand why wouldn't we allow that? It would be a conditional use permit. They would still have to come to the board to apply and show they are doing a good job."

Following the discussion, the board agreed to table the item, and proposed touring larger operations to see how they are set up and the precautions used.

Meeting was visible in the window of the superintendent's office inside the building from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. for three days in a row to meet the 24-hour requirement.

Bordewyk said that wasn't the intent of the 2012 law.

Gerry Kaufman, director of policy and legal services for the Associated School Boards of South Dakota, told House and Senate committees the organization supported the change to add continuous.

The measure subsequently won unanimous approval on the consent calendars in the House and the Senate.

Yet as recently as April, both practices were still used in state government, depending on the board or commission and the state department to which it was attached.

Tony Venhuizen, the governor's chief of staff, recently alerted officials in all bureaus and departments in state government's executive branch about the need to comply with the new law.

The challenge he's facing is finding ways to post notices at the Capitol and at some of the other state buildings so they are visible to the public around the clock.

Relatively few people use the Capitol's second-story entrance, at the top of the building's classical front steps, along Capitol Avenue.

The Capitol's main after-hours entrance is at ground level on the north side. Many visitors use the entrance throughout the day because of the adjacent parking lots.

There are also entrances on the east and west sides at ground level that are open during business hours.
