For a time, she worked as a housekeeper and nanny in the Dante area. On November 16, 1954, she was united in marriage to Lloyd Horacek in Dante. those teachers that felt like an employee perk."

Bike Yankton was able to raise money for the bikes, along with helmets and other accessories, from supporters on its Facebook page.

"We are tracking how much the bikes get used and how they are used," Mannes Homstad said. "We would love to see the program expand, but that will take some money. We also thought it would set an example to other businesses in town as an employee perk that they could provide for their workers because we are in such a great community for biking."

But using bikes as transportation isn't always convenient enough for people, Mannes Homstad said.

"People just haven't been exposed to biking to work everyday," she said. "To some people it may seem insurmountable. I can relate to that, because I have two little kids and they need to get to school. But right now, it's not even safe for them to bike to school."

Yankton streets, like most street across the Midwest, are designed for car transportation.

"The way cities have been developed over the last 40 or 50 years was all kind of one big experiment," Mannes Homstad said. "People were like, 'We have cars now.' And so cities grew around the idea that we were just going to drive everywhere. Well, the result of that, especially here, was cities just spread out."

But it isn't like this everywhere.

When Mannes Homstad was in architect school, she was able to study abroad in Italy where she learned a lot about European architecture

"Cities in Europe were developed so much earlier in time," she said. "They were designed for people, bikes and different modes of transportation. My love of cities is definitely rooted in my educational background, and so I see so much potential for Yankton in that regard. What you decide to build can help bring communities together, or it can have a negative impact. How we choose to design can have a huge impact on how our community functions and how we feel about living in the community. I would love to see designing at a more human scale, rather than automobile scale." Mannes Homstad said Yankton would have to start with the basics such as having pedestrian crosswalks in places where the city wants people to go.

 "I'd love for more people to embrace the idea of becoming more bike friendly," she said, "It is not just good for the people that choose to bike — because not everybody will choose to bike — but it is good for the community in other ways because of all the things it does to connect people to places. It really promotes the idea of shopping locally because you are developing at a more compact scale."

Mannes Homstad said she'd like to see "Bikes For Teachers" in every Yankton school, but so far the program is just being tested at Webster.

"It depends how the bikes get used," she said. "It also depends on the level of support from the community and the ability to find sponsors. For less than $5,000, we could put bikes in every school in town."

Bon Homme School Elections Postponed For One Week

BY RANDY DOCKENDORF

randy.dockendorf@yankton.net

TYNDALL — The upcoming Bon Homme school board election has been delayed a week to meet legal requirements for election notices.

The election, originally scheduled for May 12, will now be held May 19, according to Bon Homme school business manager Gary Kortan.

"(The) election was moved to May 19 from May 12 so we met the election notice requirements of advertising the election at least 10 days prior to the election date," Kortan told the Press & Dakotan in an email response.

"No other adjustments (are needed) besides moving the date back one week," he said.

At the election, voters will decide two one-year seats. They will choose two candidates from among Norm Jelsma, Cheryl Ludens, Preston Crissey and Teresa Sternhagen. The winners will serve July 1, 2015, through June 30, 2016.

Jelsma and Ludens are the incumbents in the race.

Two other races won't require an election, Kortan said.

• Three-year petitions were filed from Dr. Scott Weber, Amanda Larson and Ben Hellmann to fill the three open positions beginning on July 1, 2015, through June 30, 2018. Weber and Larson are the incumbents.

• Two-year petitions were filed from incumbents Michael Sedlacek and Ashley Armstrong to fill the two open positions beginning on July 1, 2015, through June 30, 2017.

Dorothy Hajek is the only current board member who did not seek re-election, Kortan said.

through this wet season — whatever it may bring. That's our hope. Basically, it looks like things are well in order for summer."

Responding to a question from Commission chairman Todd Woods, Johnson said there could've been consequences for the bridge had they not gone forward.

"The main concern with having the flow line lower than the bent cap tops is that the bridge is not designed for that situation; it's designed to support the loads that are above, with support around that piling," he said. "Once that support is gone, you have an unsupported piling underneath the bridge bents, and that is a concern. It could potentially lead to washout or failure of a bent."

Johnson said the survey also sought information on whether this additional riprap caused river levels upstream to change.

"The data shows — through the (riprap) placement — at the Johnson Bridge, the water level didn't really rise," he said. "There was not a significant rise, if any, that came about as a result of the riprap placement."

Johnson said while stream stability seems to have been achieved for the time being, another concern about the bridge is coming from one of its banks.

"There are concerns at the southeast corner," he said. "The issue there is that that bank is migrating towards the bridge and that east abutment. That's a real concern because if that bank gets to that abutment, it will wreak havoc with that abutment."

Woods said he was happy overall with the report.

"I really like the fact that the level of the water wasn't affected by when we put riprap in that hole," he said. "We all know that bridge is an artery to the east side of our county, and if that bridge would go out or have to be closed, it'd make a lot of inconvenience to the rest of our citizens."

He added that ultimately, they'll still need to look at replacement options for the bridge.

"I think that riprap placement was more of a Band-Aid for the time being," he said. "There will be a time that bridge will need to be replaced."

In other business Tuesday, the Commission:

* Approved Avera as the insurance provider for county employees.

* Adopted a county transportation master plan.

* Held two executive sessions. No action was taken in either.
