

Caregivers Support Group Meets Mon.

The Caregivers Support Group of Yankton will meet on May 11, at 7 p.m. at Calvary Baptist Church. The meeting is open to the public.

The topic of the program will be the use of essential oils for comfort and health. Dr. David Stewart has a book titled "Healing Oils of the Bible," in which he states:

"Essential Oils are extracts from the plant fluids that maintain plant life. These fluids and resins move through the plant's circulatory system in the leaves, stems, roots and flowers, carrying nutrition to the plant cells and carrying waste products out, just as human blood functions in the body. Because essential oils are composed of the tiniest of organic molecules they can pass through cell walls and membranes delivering therapeutic benefits, not only to the plants that create them, but to people as well. They are God's natural medicine and have been recognized and used by humans for over 5,000 years that we know of. Essential oils are mentioned over 500 times in the Bible and were used by Moses, Aaron, Mary and Joseph. Jesus also received and used them, teaching his disciples to anoint the sick with oil and heal them. (Mark 6:12-13)."

The presenter for the program will be Becky Wolff, RN, who is a Certified Clinical Aromatherapy Practitioner and Instructor. She teaches clinical aromatherapy certification classes and massage techniques. She consults for healthcare organizations desiring to implement aromatherapy and/or a research based form of touch. Wolff currently teaches at the University of South Dakota in their Health Sciences Department.

She will discuss the use of essential oils for relaxation by the caregivers in self care and for the family member. The essential oil can also assist in the promotion of sleep. The attendee will be provided with relaxation practice and a sample of an essential oil.

that, 'I've got to get employed now because I've graduated.' That is correct — you've got to do that — but you don't need to take the first one. Go out and find the one that fits you because you're much better off doing that."

He also emphasized that students should work for what they're worth.

"Do not short-change yourself when it comes to the pay scale," he said. "Whenever you get in there, whatever the first dollar amount it — unless it's $50-60 per hour — don't short-change yourself."

Von Wald concluded by stating that society is in need of young leaders.

"You're equipped with the knowledge and the skills that you need, but we need you to do other things — and that other thing is we need you to take leadership in business," he said. "You're capable of that. You need to choose to do that."

History

"The students all have different exhibits there," YHS social studies teacher and advisor Doug Haar said. "It's almost like a mini-museum exhibit. This will really give people a chance to see what these kids actually do and what they created."

Walter and Mauch took first place in the senior group exhibit portion of the contest with their exhibit "Leading and Legacy: George C. Marshall and the Marshall Plan," advancing them to the national level.

This team members think they chose the perfect exhibit for this year's National History Day theme, "Leadership and Legacy in History."

"The main aspect that we wanted to hit was his leadership and legacy," Walter said. "So we studied his leadership in World War I, World War II, as a secretary of state, chief of staff and secretary of defense. We talk about the Marshall Plan which was an economic restoration plan that happened after WWII. After WWII, the European economy was sort of in shambles. The state wasn't very good and 60 percent of the industry was destroyed."

Walter said Marshall put a group together to create a plan which gave $13 billion to Europe.

"That is $160 billion now," he said. "He tried to help rebuild these economies. That helped with the formation of NATO and it helped with the European immigration. He is one of the reasons we have such a close connection with Europe. We didn't have that until the Marshall Plan. That was a cornerstone. When Obama gave his Nobel Peace Prize speech, he mentioned how he shouldn't be up there in great comparisons with people like George Marshall. So, still today he is a leader."

But this isn't the first time this team went to nationals. Last year, Mauch and Walter were awarded "best in state" and ranked fifth nationally.

"Last year, we did our project on Agent Orange," Walter said. "We kind of talked about how the government should have taken more responsibility. But this time, we wanted to look at the other side of it. So we picked the Marshall Plan."

Mauch said the team got a general "feel" of the competition last year and now they know what to focus on for this year.

"At the national competition, there are so many people there," he said. "For many of these students, this is all they do. We knew from the start if we wanted to go and compete again, we had to make a board that was 10 times better than last year in order to get that much further."

This year, the team's board comes equipped with a rotary dial phone wired to play a speech Marshall made about the Marshall Plan at a Harvard commencement ceremony.

"Along with that, we have medallions, coins and stamps printed with his picture," Walter said. "We also have a grain sack from Greece that was part of the first shipment of the Marshall Plan from 1947 at the bottom of our board."

"It's just a personalized touch that makes people realize, 'Wow. That's part of history,'" Mauch added. "We really ... brainstormed on how we can take our board to the top, and I really think that we have done that."

Besides making sure their exhibit has that "wow" factor, the team also has been hitting the books hard.

"Most of the hours spent comes from just the research aspect alone," Walter said. "One time we went to University Of South Dakota (USD) and sat there for at least four hours digging up materials."

According to Haar, USD was instrumental in making this project possible.

"USD's History Department and Dan Daily have bent over backwards to assist us over the years and have invited our junior class AP students to come to the college and they show the kids how to use the data bases in the library," Haar said.

Haar said it gives his students a "leg up" in the competition.

"Last year, we brought a 30-page bibliography to nationals, but this year I want to do at least 50 or 60-page bibliography," Walter said.

Walter's and Mauch's goal this year is to place better than they did last year and earn a special award.

"Some people who received special awards and were able to fly to Normandy and other international places," Walter said.

Though the pair have both been accepted and are planning on going to South Dakota State University, they also have their eyes on potential scholarships the competition has to offer.

"There are some really nice scholarships," Mauch said "Even though we have decided on where we are going to go, it would be cool to all of our option."

The trip won't be all work and no play. The team plans on going to a Yankees vs. Orioles game and seeing historical monuments in Washington D.C., which is just 15 minutes away from the location of the competition.

"This project definitely takes a lot of time and is a big investment — but it is a good investment," Mauch said. "To be able to be take part in a national competition is well worth it. Thank you to Mr. Haar and Ms. Becky Tassa for helping us get there. We couldn't do it without you. Ms. Tassa always helps when we need something, and Mr. Haar is always finding us books. He says, 'Here. Read this. This will help you step up your project that much more'. Every step we take up is taking us a step further in placing higher up in nationals."

Though this will be the final year the team will be able to compete in the contest, they hope to take part in the contest in some other way in the future.

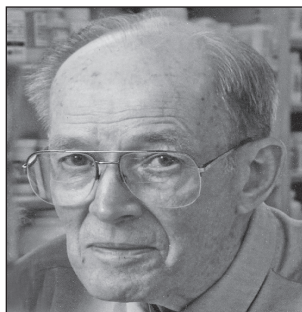

"(Walter) and I both have said we would like to try to judge the competition next year," Mauch said. "We just want to stay with it."
