significantly larger than the fish they usually use for spawning. "Typically when we're spawning them, for a female, we're looking for that 60-80-pound range," he said. "This one is extraordinarily bigger than what we're used to." The honor of catching this beast went to hatchery assistant manager Craig Bockholt, who said it took a lot of effort to land. "It was our last day of our paddlefish brood stock collection effort and we were having trouble collecting fish," Bockholt said. "All of a sudden, our net just disappeared in the water and we went over there to pick it up out of our boat. There's three of us in our boat and it took all three of us to get it in our boat. It was like a big dolphin." He added that while this is the biggest fish he's seen come to the hatchery, others have caught much bigger fish.

The state Transportation Commission rejected that bid in April. Joel Jundt, DOT's director for planning and engineering, told commissioners Thursday about the new two-bid plan. Jundt said the bids for the two phases of the Fourth Street work would be sought within a month or two but wouldn't be at the same time. He said the 2016 work might be more economical because of another paving project already planned for next year. "This is the right step to move ahead," commission member Ralph Marquardt of Yankton said after the meeting.

"There's some crews out on the river that have caught 140-pounders," he said. "I think back in the '90s, they caught a 150-pounder, but it wasn't brought back into the hatchery because usually the bigger fish don't spawn as well. It's really stressful on the fish. Our goal here is to take eggs from the fish and release them back into the wild and not stress them out anymore than they have to be. Normally, we don't take (larger ones out of) the wild, but we were really struggling to get fish this year, so we kind of had to take what Mother Nature gave us." Jason Sorensen, fisheries biologist with the South Dakota Game, Fish & Parks Commission, said environment and age help paddlefish that normally average from 60-80 pounds to grow larger. "It kind of depends on what habitat they're hanging out in," Sorensen said. "Down here, near Yankton, in the river below Gavins Point, they spend a lot of their time fighting water currents and swimming to find their food. In a reservoir setting

Bennis saw the design from about a block away and thought, 'That'll definitely work.' Bennis will be long gone by the time the WAYC begins competition in Yankton on June 8, but Bennis said there is a source of pride that his work will be viewed by nearly one thousand visitors. "I'm so proud of this competition and what it brings to South Dakota," he said. "It's a very big deal." "And I'm happy that this (design) will be seen." Follow @jhoeck on Twitter like Lake Francis Case, the food is plentiful. They eat zooplankton ... they don't have to expend any energy to fight water flows like they do in a river setting. So they get a little larger and they're short and round instead of long and skinny." Sorensen said the 129-pound specimen was probably around 20-30 years old, possibly older. Powell said a lot of care and work went into the two large fish. "We actually half the dose of hormone that we typically use just to keep the stress levels down," he said. "We took extra care when working with them. These big fish are hard to work with because it takes three guys or three hatchery personnel to lift these fish out of the water just to collect the eggs. They're extremely strong fish. They've got a lot of muscle behind them and so they're difficult to work with."

WALL ST. RECAP

U.S. stocks are ending modestly lower following a sell-off in the Chinese market and concerns about an approaching deadline for Greece to make a debt payment. FOR THE WEEK: The Dow is down 105.90 points, or 0.6 percent. The S&P 500 is down 5.27 points, or 0.3 percent. The Nasdaq is up 8.61 points, or 0.2 percent. FOR THE YEAR: The Dow is up 303.05 points, or 1.7 percent. The S&P 500 index is up 61.89 points, or 3 percent. The Nasdaq is up 361.92 points, or 7.6 percent.

He added that they also take care not to take all of the female's eggs. "We don't collect all of the eggs from the fish because we want this fish to survive," he said. "We collect just the amount of eggs we need and then we stop collecting the eggs from the fish just to not put any additional stress on the fish." Powell said the larger paddlefish are expected to be released back into Lake Francis Case within the next week. "When we spawn this one, it's important for us to get the genetic representation from this fish," he said. "However, it's just as important to release this fish back into the wild. We've collected the eggs and then next week, we'll transport this fish back to the Missouri River system and release it back where we captured it." Follow @RobNielsen-PandD on Twitter.
