Yankton Co. Democrats To Meet Tonight

Election discussions for 2012 will begin in earnest when the Yankton Co. Democrats meet at Ben's Brewing Company at 7 p.m. tonight (Thursday).

'Now that redistricting is done, it's time to recruit candidates for state Legislature, county commission and other races," says Yankton Co. Democrat Chairman Jay Williams.

Besides discussing the 2012 elections, Bernie Hunhoff will give a legislative update and Williams will give a school board update and discuss new opt-out potential.

All interested parties are welcome to attend. Call Jay Williams at (605) 665-8324 for more information.

Drainage Task Force To Hold Public Hearings

The Yankton County Drainage Task Force will hold public hearings beginning at 7 p.m. Nov. 15, in the Yankton County Commission chambers at the Yankton County Government Center, 321 West Third Street, Yankton.

The public hearings are to solicit comments and suggestions from the general public regarding the adoption of a Yankton County Drainage Ordinance.

The Yankton County Drainage Task Force began formulating a draft Drainage Ordinance April 26. The ordinance draft is available on the Yankton County website using the following link, "YC Drainage Ordinance draft," or from the Yankton County Planning & Zoning office, located in the Government Center.

For more information, contact the Yankton County Planning & Zoning Department at (605) 260-4445.

TransCanada has promised to file court challenges if Nebraska tries to intervene, saying the decision is a federal issue.

Jones estimated the losses a delay would cause in a statement filed as a response to a federal lawsuit filed by three environmental groups. TransCanada was not named in the lawsuit, which targets the U.S. State Department and U.S. Fish and Wildlife for not stopping early groundwork on the project. The company filed a motion to intervene because of its financial stake in the case.

TransCanada said it already has spent $1.7 billion on the $7 billion Keystone XL, which would carry crude oil from Alberta to Texas Gulf Coast refineries, according to Jones' statement.

Jones said the $1 million-perday loss estimate was based on TransCanada's existing promises to buy construction materials that require a great deal of advance notice, its commitments to power utilities, and the costs of maintaining staff and equipment, among other expenses.

"Should the delay in issuance of a presidential permit extend beyond 2011, it will jeopardize TransCanada's ability to meet the terms of its shipping agreements and further increase the economic harm TransCanada will suffer," Jones said in the statement. TransCanada spokesman

Shawn Howard said Wednesday that the economic fallout would go beyond the company.

"If they increase the project's cost, if they file frivolous lawsuits, does that cost us money? Yes," Howard said. "But it's consumers they end up hurting because of this. If the price of gasoline goes up, it's not the company that pays those costs. It's you and I."

Pipeline opponents called the company's financial loss estimates self-serving.

"Their claims about these financial losses are overblown and disingenuous," said Noah Greenwald, endangered species director for the Center for Biological Diversity, one of the groups that filed the lawsuit. "They're trying to force this on us, to ensure we don't have a fair process that weighs the cost and benefits.'

The environmental groups' lawsuit against TransCanada alleges U.S. officials illegally allowed the company to begin preparing the route for the 1,700-mile-long pipeline — which would run through Montana, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Texas — even though the project hasn't gained final government approval.

The lawsuit was filed in U.S. District Court in Nebraska by the Center for Biological Diversity, Western Nebraska Resources Council and Friends of the Earth. The State Department, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service are named as defendants because of their oversight roles.

The lawsuit claims TransCanada was allowed to mow down delicate native grasses and relocate the endangered American burying beetle from a 100-mile corridor through northern Nebraska.

Howard, the TransCanada spokesman, has said the claims are false, and that the company mowed grass in an effort to protect and move some of the protected beetles. In every case where mowing was done, the company received permission from landowners, he said.
