be examining yourself.' It is hard to believe what they have accomplished in just three years."

Cull said the dream he had of bringing archery in Yankton to the national and international stage would not have been possible were it not for the local and national partnerships.

"We can't thank enough all the partners that came through for us in this endeavor," he said. "It is one of the great success stories for us in moving the center to South Dakota and how it all came together. The expansion is possible because of our great partnerships. Everyone from the National Field Archery Association, the city of Yankton, County of Yankton, Yankton Area Progressive Growth, at the state level the Governor's office of Progressive Growth, archery specific funding — and of course, our big shot in the arm has been the Easton Foundation. It is a great example of a lot of different entities working together to accomplish a common goal."

Cull said the sky is the limit on the opportunities that will result because of the growth at the Yankton facility.

"We can look at different disciplines and opportunities in the off-season, which for us is January, February, March, so we will be looking at doing some bigger events during that time-frame," he said. "I don't think there is any doubt that there will be growth in everything we offer here at the facility."

Next on Cull's list of goals to accomplish for the facility is to gain designation as a Community Olympic Development Program (COPD).

"We are probably six months to a year away," he said. "It will be a big feather in our cap to get the designation, though. I think we are on the right road and are getting everything lined up now. The COPD gives us the stamp of approval from the United States Olympic Committee, and it gives us the ability to go into their program and help the training and moving all the way up in the world of archery."

The Yankton facility has already become a major player in the archery world, having hosted several international tournaments and, this week, hosting the first international coaching classes offered at the facility.

"It is a great thing. It is becoming an international facility and is a great thing for Yankton to part of the global economy as it were in a sense of what we offer in the terms of archery and bow hunting," said Yankton Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Mike Dellinger. "It is a tremendous opportunity to have visitors from all over the world, as we do today. During the groundbreaking, today there are classes going on where instructors from around the world are being taught how to show the benefits of archery and bow hunting. It is great for the NFAA and it is great for Yankton. We just look forward to the positive growth that this facility and the events that will happen here bring to town."

Another goal of the Easton Foundation and the NFAA with the expansion in the facility is to help grow the sport of archery at the local and national collegiate level.

"The collegiate programs are one of the main goals that the Easton Foundation has to get the programs going," Cull said. "The NCAA considers archery an emerging sport. We will be working with Mount Marty College, the University of South Dakota and other colleges as well to get their programs up and running here soon. As far as hosting NCAA tournaments, archery isn't considered a sport yet, so I guess we can't cross that bridge until we get to it. But we do have collegiate events already scheduled coming up this year."

With everything going on at the complex, Cull said it all comes down to helping grow archery as a sport in the United States.

"We get the opportunity to train athletes, to train archers, year-round," he said. "Of course, because of the weather here, that is pretty hard to do in the winter. So now we have a facility where we can do that. (The facility) just has a lot of really neat things that will help us expand archery."

veteran reps will also be there to assist them," Larsen said.

Lunch will also be provided free of charge by VFW Post 791 Ladies Auxiliary from 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m.

Murphy said that along with giving veterans opportunities for employment, the fair also sends a strong message.

"It crystallizes the fact that veterans serve our country, and many of them have fought for our country. And we're recognizing that service, and we want to see them be successful when they return," he said.

Murphy added that he hopes veterans will take advantage of the area's first job fair of its kind.

"This is a very good opportunity to interview and speak with the employers," he said. "It's an opportunity to network and to sell themselves and, during this economic downturn, to find better or suitable employment."

Texas Judge Has Visits With Daughter Limited

MALLEN, Texas (AP) — A Texas family law judge seen beating his older daughter in a video she posted on YouTube has been placed under a temporarily restraining order, and his ex-wife's attorney said Friday it effectively prevents him from visiting his younger daughter.

Under the order issued Thursday by another judge, Aransas County Court-at-Law Judge William Adams is forbidden from visiting his 10-year-old daughter without getting permission from the girl's mother, his ex-wife. The order also says Adams can't disparage the woman or drink alcohol within 24 hours of seeing his child.

Brett Pritchard, the attorney for Adams' ex-wife Hallie Adams, said in a prepared statement that the ruling "temporarily terminates the visitation between Judge Adams and his younger child."

William Adams' attorney did not respond to a request for comment Friday from The Associated Press.
