Deadlines Approaching For Area Elks Scholarships For Seniors

Area high school seniors will have the opportunity once again to apply for Elks National Foundation scholarships.

Information concerning scholarship applications has been forwarded to area high school guidance counselors. Graduating high school seniors who may be interested in said scholarships should contact the guidance counselor in their school. They may also call Yankton Elks Lodge 994 at 605-665-3333. Additional information is available by logging on to the Elks website www.elks.org/enf/scholars.

Ray Kooistra serves as chairman for the Yankton Elks Lodge Most Valuable Student Scholarship competition. Kooistra advises seniors who may be seeking higher education, either on the collegiate level or in vocational education, to strongly consider an Elks application.

"Only the federal government spends more on scholarships than does the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks," Kooistra said.

Oprah Winfrey furthered her education due, in part, to an Elks National Foundation scholarship.

Last year, more than $2 million in scholarship monies were awarded. One girl and one boy each will be awarded a $60,000 scholarship. Yankton Elks Lodge No. 994 has had a $4,000 scholarship winner eight of the last 11 years.

Yankton Elks Lodge awards six $300 scholarships each to three women and three men from the Yankton area. Applications submitted by these six top students are advanced to the South Dakota Elks Association for additional scholarship consideration. Deadline for submitting applications for local judging is Dec. 2.

Deadline for Elks scholarships Most Valuable & Vocational Grants are also due Dec. 2. The Yankton Elks Lodge No. 994 will be awarding six $300 scholarships, three to men and three to women at the local level. These six award winners will then be sent on to the state level where the award winners may receive additional scholarship monies.

Application forms for Most Valuable, Emergency, & Legacy (awards for children of Elks) are available by downloading www.elks.org/enf/scholars.

South Dakota Vocational Grants are available by contacting your school counselor.

Emergency Grants must be received by Dec. 3.

The National Foundation must receive the Legacy application by Feb. 1, 2012.

Please return Most Valuable & Vocational grant applications to the Elks Lodge #994 at 504 West 27th Street, Yankton.

land to rebuild wildlife habitats. The agency said most of the letters went out before the flooding started. But some were dated June 6, well after the flooding began.

The agency declined to discuss the letters further Wednesday.

McCaskill said she had no reason to doubt that the timing was a mistake. But she added: "The right hand should have known what the left hand was doing, and someone should have taken a time out for common sense and realized that this was ill-conceived and the timing was terrible."

Bruce Biermann said water was inundating bottom land when he received a letter from the corps expressing interest in land he farms for absentee landowners in northwest Missouri's Holt County.

"I was very upset, very upset," he said. "It's kind of like if I came to you and for some reason I liked your house and wanted to buy it. But you told me it wasn't for sale. So I turn around and set your house on fire and go ahead and while your house is burning come to you and say, 'Your house is burning. Do you want to sell it?'"

Blunt and McCaskill have each co-sponsored a handful of amendments to the energy and water appropriations bill being debated by Congress. One is aimed at making it easier for communities to rebuild levees damaged during flooding, another would prioritize funding from the Missouri River Recovery Program to flood control efforts and a third would stop the Army Corps of Engineers from offering to buy flooded properties.

All three amendments face uncertain paths to becoming law. While bipartisan support will boost their prospects, flood funding and river politics are notoriously state-to-state issues that often transcend party line votes. Besides being voted down by Congress, the amendments could also be ruled as unrelated to the legislation and stripped from the larger funding bill.

Residents of flood-ravaged communities have been clamoring for relief. Even before this year, many were angry about the corps' effort to buy land for wildlife restoration efforts because that takes the land off the tax rolls.

The corps already owns 8,000 acres of land in Holt County, a low-lying area with 52 miles of levees. This year, the county experienced 32 breaches, inundating more than 120,000 acres for more than 100 days, said County Clerk Kathy Kunkel.

Pipeline

earlier federal review because it was conducted by Cardno ENTRIX, a Houston-based environmental contractor that has identified TransCanada as a major client for other projects. Cardno ENTRIX has denied any conflict of interest.

"You can remove a lot of the concerns of citizens by having the state pay for it, to assure them that this is a straightforward, fair process," Flood said. "That report only belongs to the taxpayers of Nebraska."

Environmentalists and some Nebraska landowners said the pipeline would have disrupted the Sandhills' loose soil for decades, harmed wildlife, and contaminated the groundwater. Business and labor groups who support the project have said the environmental criticism is overblown and based more on opposition to oil than the project itself. They maintain the project would create thousands of construction jobs, although the exact number is disputed.

TransCanada has said the pipeline would use new technology that would make it among the safest pipelines in the world. Alex Pourbaix, TransCanada's president for energy and oil pipelines, has said the state study could be finished in six to nine months with cooperation from state and federal agencies.
