Libya

"They gave us the best initial assessments, and those proved inaccurate, but they warned us those assessments were subject to change as they got more information," he said.

Rice's comments on national television have drawn fierce criticism, with some Senate Republicans promising to block her nomination if President Barack Obama taps her to replace Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton. Obama angrily defended Rice on Wednesday at a White House news conference and called the complaints outrageous attempts to besmirch her reputation.

Rep. C.A. Dutch Ruppersberger of Maryland, the top Democrat on the Intelligence panel, said Rice "was given that same information we received from the administration through the intelligence community. And that's the information she testified to, end of story."

In one of her TV interviews, Rice said she was providing the "best information and the best assessment we have today."

"In fact this was not a pre-planned, premeditated attack. That what happened initially was that it was a spontaneous reaction to what had just transpired in Cairo as a consequence of the video," she said. "People gathered outside the embassy and then it grew very violent. Those with extremist ties joined the fray and came with heavy weapons, which unfortunately are quite common in post-revolutionary Libya, and that then spun out of control."

That answer has drawn constant criticism from Republicans, who question why Rice failed to call the event a terrorist attack. Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said they would work to defeat Rice's selection if she is nominated to be the nation's top diplomat. Graham said Wednesday that he couldn't back anyone who is "up to their eyeballs in the Benghazi debacle."

Ruppersberger said the initial attack on the consulate was chaotic, with "a lot of people running around," while the second attack, on a CIA annex near the consulate, "seemed a lot more sophisticated," with the use of mortars, more clearly pointing to terrorist training and tactics.

Obama aides say the president's vigorous defense of Rice during the news conference should not be seen as a sign that he plans to nominate her for the top job at the State Department. Instead, they said it reflects a frustration within the administration that Rice, a longtime Obama adviser, is being unfairly targeted by Republican lawmakers.

Rice continues to have strong support within the White House as a candidate for the top post at the State Department. Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., and chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, remains a leading contender as well.

Obama aides say the president hasn't made a decision on that job or others opening in his administration, and may not do so until after Thanksgiving.

In the meantime, several House and Senate committees are conducting hearings on the Libya attack, with the Senate Intelligence Committee meeting Thursday afternoon with Morell and other administration officials. The panels will hear from former CIA Director David Petraeus on Friday, one week after he resigned amid the acreage in 1965.

Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians ate lunch Thursday noon at Lang's American Cafe and as they were leaving one of them left at the desk an envelope with Waring's private return and autographs of a number of the singers and orchestra members, together with a listing of the instruments they play.

Rural electric cooperatives have come out against Gov. George Mickelson's plan to share the cost and profit of generating more hydroelectric power, and the governor doesn't like it.

revelation of an extramarital affair.

The lawmakers viewed video of the Benghazi attack that showed events in real time. They watched a composite of security video from the consulate and a surveillance feed taken by an unarmed CIA Predator drone.

"We saw a real-time film ... of exactly what happened," Senate Intelligence Chairman Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., told reporters. She said there would be at least two more closed fact-finding hearings before lawmakers would conduct a public session to share what they had learned.

"We know mistakes were made and we've got to learn from that," Sen. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga., the committee's ranking Republican, told reporters.

Clinton has agreed to appear before Congress to answer questions about the Benghazi attack. State Department spokesman Mark Toner said Clinton will testify after an independent Accountability Review Board presents its findings. Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla., who heads the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said she expects the report's completion in December and that Clinton will appear at that time.

Pipeline

create thousands of jobs both in the construction of the pipeline and at refineries. Opponents say the pipeline won't create nearly as many jobs as TransCanada has projected.

Meanwhile, environmental groups have planned a protest outside the White House on Sunday. They want Obama to reject the pipeline because a leak could contaminate underground and surface water supplies and they worry about increases in air pollution around refineries and harm to wildlife.

"All of those concerns still exist," said Jane Kleeb, who has helped organize opposition to the pipeline with the Bold Nebraska group.

Pipeline opponents and backers have been making similar arguments since TransCanada proposed the project in 2008.

The Keystone XL pipeline is designed to carry oil from Canada across Montana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. TransCanada also has proposed connecting it to the Bakken oil field in Montana and North Dakota.

President Barack Obama rejected TransCanada's original application for a federal permit to build the pipeline in January after congressional Republicans imposed a deadline for approval that he said didn't allow enough time to address questions about the route through Nebraska.

Since then, TransCanada has split the project into two pieces. The company began construction in August on the southern section of the pipeline between Oklahoma and the Gulf Coast. The southern section of the pipeline didn't need presidential approval because it won't cross an international border.

Nebraska environmental officials are close to completing their review of a new proposed route for the pipeline in that state. TransCanada altered the pipeline's path through Nebraska to avoid the environmentally sensitive Sandhills region and a couple towns' drinking water wells.

State regulators issued a 600-page report on the oil pipeline last month, and they plan to hold a public hearing in Albion on Dec. 4. Then regulators will make a recommendation to Gov. Dave Heineman, who will decide whether to approve the new route.

Heineman has supported the pipeline project in the past, but he opposed TransCanada's original proposed route that crossed the Sandhills. He has not commented on the new route.

After Nebraska officials finish their process, the U.S. State Department will review the project again before Obama has the final say.
