Rally

older kids at the beginning to find out bullying hot spots in the area. What's different is, we're saying you can't be a bully. We're also teaching others to be an ally — don't be a bystander, don't watch it happen so we can create an in balance so the allies will overpower the bully."

Webster School becomes the first and only school in Yankton to have teachers and administrators trained on Olweus, Ryken added.

The rally included students and teachers wearing anti-bullying shirts, which were provided to the school by Thrivent Financial. A video was shown of students and teachers saying they will stand up to bullying. Yankton High School cheerleaders led the crowd in an anti-bullying cheer, students also put their names on feet taped to the wall to say they will "stand up" against bullying, and a balloon release was held to demonstrate that there will be no bullying at Webster School.

Community members in attendance included parents, bus drivers, cafeteria workers, firefighters, police officers, college administrators, a prison official and politicians, among others.

"It's important to have a consistent way of confronting bullying," said Webster and Lincoln School counselor Lesley Hale. "Being consistent is really the key way to prevent bullying."

Ryken hopes the community sees the success of the anti-bullying program at Webster School and other schools in Yankton get trained on the program.

"Any time you have one act of bullying, that's one act too many," she said. "You can never say bullying is not a big deal because it is."
