of water in the process, so you're looking at needing 9 million gallons per day to meet our 2015 demand." Currently, the surface water intake has a capacity of about 5 million gallons per day, and the wells on the Nebraska side of the Missouri River top out around 4 million gallons per day.

A new collector well would give the city more flexibility, according to Goodmanson.

"It would give us the redundancy and reliability we're looking for," he Commissioner Paul Lowrie said he had been asked by members of the public if there was concern about placing a well just downstream of the city's wastewater treatment plant. Natural gas and oil pipelines also cross below the Missouri River in that area.

"It will be addressed in this report," Goodmanson said. "We don't see a lot of issues. Otherwise, we wouldn't be going there.'

The other element of the contract will be to design and bid out upgrades needed to Water Plant No. 2, which was built in 1972.

"This is looking at our lime-feed system, our carbon dioxide-feed system and things like that," Good-manson said. "These are all pieces of equipment that are 40 years old now. They are in need of replace-

Commissioner Jake Hoffner asked if the HDR proposal was a fair price for the work being done.

"I believe it's fair," Goodmanson said. "We've met with other engineering firms. We picked HDR because of their specialization in this.

We're confident in their work. I'm not going to tell you they're the cheapest, but we picked them for a reason — because of their experience in this field."

The commission unanimously approved the agreement.

Commissioner Charlie Gross was absent from Monday's meeting. In other business Monday, the commission:

• agreed to form a Meridian Bridge Plaza Committee to update the master plan for the area. It will consist of two city commissioners, Parks and Recreation Department director Todd Larson, Community Planning director Dave Mingo and five members of the public that will be drawn from organizations with an interest in development of the

• learned that taxable sales due to the city dropped 3.6 percent in October. Interim City Manager Al Viereck said the same thing happened in October of last year and speculated that it was due to a large business that hadn't turned in its sales tax report on time. In November 2011, there was a sales tax spike for the city, and Viereck expressed hope that would be the case again this year. Through the first 10 months of 2012, Yankton's sales tax returns are up almost 10 percent compared to 2011;

• updated the city's hangar lease agreement with the University of South Dakota so that it is on a month-by-month basis until the school's hangar in Vermillion is completed; and

• awarded a $142,500 bid to James Steel of Yankton to build a new 70-foot by 50-foot hangar at Chan Gurney Airport to replace one that can no longer be used.

lives touch the lives of others," he said. "We may not realize it, but it's kind of like a ripple effect. And the people we are remembering today, they touched your lives, and they touched the lives of others."

Monday night's ceremony also featured the singing of "Silent Night" by members of the YHS a capella group.

The remembrance tree and a list of the names being remembered will now be put on display in the YHS Commons for the remainder of the holiday season. Purchased ornaments were given to the family members to take home.

"Everyone gets their bulb so they can have them at Christmas time with their family," said Kayla Sylvester, vice president of the student council and head of the committee that organizes the event. "It's just a nice way to celebrate and remember others.

ing from a federal law and a change in South Dakota's unclaimed property laws.

Banks used to give the state unclaimed deposits after five years when owners could not be located, but a new South Dakota law shortened that to three years. So, next fiscal year, the state will see three years' worth of unclaimed money.

The governor has an idea of how to spend some of the one-time money, including shoring up a retirement system for former employees of the state's Rapid City cement plant, which was sold in 2001. The system isn't fully funded, so it can't cover all payments due in future years.

The governor also said he'll listen to proposals from state lawmakers. Senate Republican Leader Russell Olson of Wentworth told The Associated Press that school districts and Medicaid providers prefer dedicated long-term funding that's available year after year, but they may be happy to receive some extra onetime funding. He said he'll talk with school officials and health care representatives to get their views.

"You get mixed signals from those folks. Some say they don't want one-time money and others say: 'Hey, one-time money is great, bring it by the truckload," "said Olson, who set up Monday's meeting with

The current state budget authorizes spending $4 billion in the fiscal year that ends June 30, and about $1.2 billion is from general state funds. It also authorizes spending another $1.75 billion in federal funds and $1 billion in other state funds dedicated to specific purposes, such as highway construction and maintenance.

State officials report that through September, general state revenue for the first three months for the current budget year was up 1.6 percent from what the Legislature expected.

House Assistant Republican Leader Justin Cronin of Gettysburg said the task of putting together a state budget is complicated by uncertainty over how much money the federal government will give the state. Congress and President Barack Obama face a Dec. 31 deadline to craft a deficit-reduction plan. If they fail, taxes will rise and automatic cuts to government programs will kick in.

Daugaard said his budget assumes that the president and Congress will not allow the automatic spending cuts to occur on

GOP Blocks Bill To Give Hunters More Land Access

WASHINGTON (AP) — A wide-ranging bill to give hunters and fishermen more access to public lands stalled in the Senate Monday after Republicans said it spends too much money.

Republicans supported opening lands for outdoorsmen and many other provisions in the bill sponsored by Democratic Sen. Jon Tester, but GOP senators blocked the legislation on principle Monday evening in a mostly party-line procedural vote after Senate Budget Committee's top Republican, Jeff Sessions of Alabama, objected to spending on conservation programs included in the bill.

The sportsmen's bill would increase land access and allow hunters to bring home as trophies 41 polar bears killed in Canada before the government started protecting polar bears as a threatened species. The legislation would also exclude ammunition and tackle from federal environmental laws that regulate lead, allow bow hunters to cross federal land where hunting isn't allowed, encourage federal land agencies to help states maintain shooting ranges, boost fish populations and protect animal habitat.

Sessions said he supported the overall bill but objected to spending on conservation programs that he said violated

The bill also faced some objections from environmental groups over the polar bear imports and exclusions from lead standards.

The lead provision threatens public health and the measures "could set back wildlife conservation efforts," said California Sen. Barbara Boxer, the Democratic chairwoman of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. Boxer was the only Democrat to vote against moving the bill forward Monday.

Ammunition and tackle that contain lead are now unregulated under federal toxic substance laws, and the EPA has so far declined to regulate them. The bill would make it law that the Environmental Protection Agency could not regulate ammunition and tackle, leaving those decisions to states. Environmental groups opposing the exemption say that birds on land and water are killed by lead poisoning after eating the spent ammunition and fishing tackle.
