within the past year it has not recently performed in years past. Temporary, seasonal part-time help will still be needed during the winter months."

Commission Chairman Bruce Jensen and Commissioner Allen Sinclair were quick to respond that they would not support the request and insisted upon replacement of only Paulsen.

However, not all of the commissioners agreed that was the correct course.

"The fact of the matter is, come Nov. 15, you're going to be 2 1/2 people down in the county shop," Commissioner Garry Moore stated. "We did move the secretarial position from a full-time to part-time position (in addition to the two resignations). We expect more administrative duties out of our highway superintendent, making him less (available) for road work. It just seems to me it would only be practical that we allow both employees to be replaced. It's in the budget."

Sinclair said the state decided under former Gov. Bill Janklow to cut the number of employees at the South Dakota Department of Transportation and replace them with part-time help.

recruiting again and get as many cadets as I can."

Nelson clarified the term "probationary" when it comes to the USD program. "We're not a bad program, but we didn't meet the Army's viable (definition) of 15 commissions a year," he said. "If I could commission 15 lieutenants a year, then that would relieve our pressure."

USD has come within one student, which makes the goal very attainable, Nelson said.

While he welcomes the Army's reversal of its decision, Nelson noted the developments of the past month have made recruiting more difficult.

"We didn't get a recruitment officer hired for this semester (because of the uncertainty)," he explained. "And it's a critical time recruiting for next year's freshman class and anybody transferring. For our colleges, it's a prime time for recruiting."

The USD effort will need to double down on its recruiting efforts and get out the word that the program will remain, Nelson said.

"It will hurt during the next couple of years," he said. "Some people aren't sure whether USD will have ROTC or not."

Ironically, Wednesday's announcement came as Nelson was meeting with USD faculty and student leaders about losing the school's ROTC program.

Now, Nelson is shifting gears as ROTC enters a new phase. He said he didn't know all the details on the criteria that will be used to judge the ROTC program.

"The 13 schools identified for closure were put on a 24-month probationary status," he said. "After one year, (Army officials) will look at the school. If there is improvement after one year, we will come off probation. If not, they will look at us after another year."

facilitating it. During that process, it was decided we'd have a much better chance of getting an FQHC if we worked with an existing provider. The closest one was in Elk Point. It turned out to be the right decision, because we got the grant. I couldn't be more pleased.

"(The FQHC) will give primary health care to people who otherwise don't have access. It will provide service regardless of a person's ability to pay."

The clinic will be located on the third floor of the Avera Sacred Heart Hospital (ASHH) Professional Office Pavilion and Education Center, and allPOINTS now has 120 days to open the facility.

"We have a design in place," said Pam Rezac, ASHH president and CEO. "We knew that, if it was approved, we would have to move very quickly. We will now have to prepare the site.

"We also have to work on the coordination of care," she added. "It will be very important that the services of ASHH are fully cooperative with the FQHC."

Stange said he also expects Lewis and Clark Behavioral Health to provide support services for the FQHC.

In 2011, Yankton County was designated as a medically underserved population by the HRSA. The designation was needed before the area would be eligible for a FQHC.

The Yankton City Commission, Yankton County Commission, Yankton Medical Clinic and Avera Sacred Heart Hospital wrote letters of support for the designation.

Subsequently, a needs assessment for a FQHC was done in 2012.

The people targeted for services in Yankton County have incomes below 200 percent of the federal poverty level. The assessment found that the county had 7,322 such individuals, 58 percent of whom either had no insurance or was on Medicaid.

According to Sibelius, the two new health centers will help care for approximately 7,682 additional South Dakotans. South Dakota health centers served 55,948 patients last year, 36 percent of them uninsured.

"We remain committed to providing more South Dakotans with the quality patient-centered care they deserve," Sebelius said in a media release. "South Dakota health centers are key partners in the implementation of the Affordable Care Act, and new health center sites will increase access to those who need it most."

Nationwide, 236 health center programs will receive approximately $150 million in grant awards to serve more than 1.25 million additional patients.

U.S. Sen. Tim Johnson (D-S.D.) had talked with USD and MMC officials about the ROTC closures. Johnson's office provided the Press & Dakotan with the copy of a letter it received this week from Army officials concerning the reversal of its decision.

The schools on probation that don't meet criteria or performance standards after the first year will receive one year's notice of intent to close the unit.

Programs that show improvement or meet evaluation criteria will be retained on probation for a second year. At the end of the 24-month period, those schools will be re-evaluated and either receive one year's notice of intent to close the unit or be retained.

The Army has directed a review of the criteria used to recommend the ROTC closures. "Once complete, the evaluation criteria will be used to reassess all ROTC programs nationwide," the letter said.

USD spokesman Phil Carter said university officials are learning more information about the probationary status. "We are still waiting on the details and criteria for this future assessment," he said.

MMC President Joseph Benoit said the Army decision means the Catholic college can continue offering a ROTC program not likely otherwise possible.

"This is really exciting news for us," he said. "At least, in the short term, we can move forward with continuing to recruit students, knowing we do have a military science option on our campus."

Benoit said he has been notified that Nelson will call him today (Friday) for further discussion.

Through the collaboration with USD, Mount Marty students are offered military science classes on the Yankton campus by USD instructors, Benoit said. The MMC students participate in group exercises and other required activities with the USD students at Vermillion.

The Mount Marty students can receive their Army commission while completing their degrees and earning a minor in military science, Benoit said. MMC has graduated seven commissioned officers since 1997, including one student last spring.

While relatively small at MMC, the ROTC program has remained important for the Catholic college, Benoit said. The program offers leadership training and ties in well with the college's liberal arts education and strength in areas such as nursing, he said.

Retaining the ROTC program comes at a critical time, as MMC rolls out its new strategic plan and was recently recognized as a military-friendly college, Benoit said. The ROTC program also brings with it another opportunity for usage of the GI Bill for veterans and their dependents, he said.

"It's been a really good partnership which has allowed us as a small independent college to have a military science option," he said.

As part of an affiliate program, MMC students remain self-motivated as they take their courses and training away from the other ROTC students at USD, Nelson said.

"Alison Hoffman (of Mount Marty) is one of our top cadets," he said. "She was recently named the Distinguished Military Student (for the local ROTC program)."

For such a reason, Benoit wants to maintain the ROTC presence at MMC.

"We don't want this program to go away," he said. "We want to see this program continue for many, many years."

Nelson sees the discussion about ROTC as just part of a larger discussion about the nation's military future, particularly making do with less.

"We won the first battle, but it's not over," he said, quoting a colleague's thoughts on the recent ROTC decision.

However, Nelson believes his ROTC members provide the best example for recruiting and building up the local program.

"Our cadets are my best resource in getting out the story," he said.

performed running snow plows, you're going to need someone who is a damn good welder and mechanic," he said. "The experience I've had — and the people I've talked to will undeniably tell you — is that, if you don't know what you're doing and you haven't got the experience ... you're going to have major problems, breakdowns and damage to equipment."

"The fact of the matter is, everybody was busy a year ago when we were fully staffed, and everybody is busy now," Moore continued.

"If we're going to run that shop efficiently and use every piece of equipment we have, then we better be hiring and getting back to the same status we were at a year ago."

Sinclair made a motion to replace Paulsen, and the measure passed on a 4-1 vote. Moore dissented.

"We could probably get along without that individual as well," he said, expressing sarcasm.

Moore then made a motion to hire a second individual, but it failed on a 3-2 vote. Moore and Johnson were on the losing end of the attempt.
