Stay Fit This Holiday Season

BROOKINGS — During the busy Holiday Season, staying active is just as important as any other time of year, said Nikki Prosch, SDSU Extension Health and Physical Activity Field Specialist.

"In fact, during the holidays, you may consume more calories, so balancing out these calories with activity is a great way to avoid any unwanted weight gain," she said. Prosch encourages readers to get fit this holiday with these tips:

Avoid using the "cold weather" as an excuse to not be active. Just be sure to wear appropriate clothing. If you need help, visit iGrow.org and read the article "Exercise Cold Weather."

If you will be traveling long hours during the holidays, pack resistance bands, small weights, or a jump rope to incorporate activity into your travel plans. If you have layover time in the airport, use this time to walk around the airport.

Routine change: It is very likely that your daily routine is shaken up a little with busy holiday plans. If so, plan ahead for this change. This may mean you have to do your normal 30 minute walk in the morning or evening, instead of over lunch, or maybe you will have to break up your 30 minute session into three 10 minute sessions throughout the day.

If you do not have a family tradition during this time of year, consider starting a family walk, family relays or a sledding event.

If you can't seem to work out alone, find a family member or friend to be your "fitness buddy" during the holiday season. Working out with a friend or in a group will mean someone is counting on you.

Limited time: Squeeze in activity as much as possible, every bit counts. Walk a little faster while getting groceries for your holiday meals or while shopping for presents. Squeeze in a morning walk before the busy day begins or do squats or balance on one foot while cooking.

"Many of us look forward to this time of year for different reasons, whether it is family, friends, good food, presents or yearly traditions," Prosch said. "It is important to use the holidays for some relaxation, but remember that physical activity can be a great way to do this, especially with your loved ones."

Owen

"Everything is interstate commerce these days," he said.

House Minority Leader Bernie Hunhoff (D-Yankton) told Owen that he and his colleagues are trying to raise the minimum wage as a method to alleviate poverty.

"I've always said the minimum wage doesn't do as much economic damage as what we might worry about, but it also doesn't do as much to help as the proponents claim in terms of alleviating poverty," Owen said. "Here's the challenge: The businesses that are hurt by this are small businesses in small towns. Let's go back to 2008-2009 in the middle of a recession. Their workforce is predominantly minimum wage, and you have to give out a 1 1/2 to 2 percent raise in the midst of trying to hold on to the jobs you have. In the sense that it is blind to everything else going on (by being tied to the cost of living), it could increase that kind of damage."

Getting back to the legislative session, Owen said he doesn't see any huge issues that will be the sole focus of attention.

Still, he believes there are plenty of important issues that will be on the table. School funding, property taxes and the expansion of Medicaid are among them.

"The issues include some that lend themselves to some political rhetoric that could be a lot more heat than substance," Owen said. "Common Core educational standards have already been contentious. Medicaid, because of its link to Obamacare, lends itself to being fairly contentious. Property taxes are always a concern."

He said the Chamber supports education standards that are rigorous and therefore supports Common Core State Standards.

The Common Core State Standards were authored by the National Governors Association Center for Best Practices and the Council of Chief State School Officers. The state-led effort established a single set of educational standards for kindergarten through 12th grade in English language arts and mathematics that states can voluntarily adopt.

"We are competing with the world — students who spend much more time in the classroom working at a high level," Owen stated.

"What the South Dakota Chamber wants is to keep our eye on the goal: Students who come out of high school should be ready for a career, technical training or higher education. Common Core meets (our definition of rigorous standards)."

When it comes to expanding Medicaid eligibility to an estimated 48,500 South Dakotans, Owen believes it will happen but probably not this year. The federal government would fully cover spending on the extra enrollees through 2016, and the state's contribution would rise in stages to 10 percent of the medical costs by 2020.

"I think (the legislators will) try to articulate what South Dakota would accept as a waiver and ask the governor to go to the federal government and seek the waiver so we're doing it by South Dakota rules," Owen said. "We all agree that we should help those who can't help themselves. When you're doing a national change as profound as the Affordable Care Act, you get a lot of rules that don't make sense in a place like South Dakota. I don't think they'll expand Medicaid this year, but I think they'll say, 'If you can get it set up so that it works, then we need to embrace this.'" lottery a topic for a special study next summer.

He said a legislative study would allow the commission and business people to tell the story of where video lottery stands after 25 years in South Dakota and what might renew interest.

Turville served eight years in the state House of Representatives and is a past head of the Deadwood gaming association. He said recommendations from legislative interim committees often carry more weight that proposals from individual lawmakers.

Legislators are surveyed about their preferences for interim assignments. Turville said those responses would help the lottery commission gauge the mood within the Legislature.

He added that the committee's activities would increase legislators' understanding of video lottery while giving the commission and business people a better sense of what the full Legislature could be willing to approve.

"Believe me, if you have a positive reaction from a summer study, it's a lot easier to get it through," Turville said.

Two years ago, legislation to allow more than 10 machines per establishment won approval in one chamber, while an effort to increase the $2 bet limit was killed. When the two ideas were blended later into one piece of legislation, it died on a 4-4 vote in a Senate committee.

Most of the terminals in use are old VLC 8700s which are officially considered as obsolete by the lottery commission. Some businesses are adding the new line-up games, which are similar to casino slot machines.

The dilemma facing establishment managers and machine owners is potentially losing their die-hard players who prefer the VLCs. Establishments are getting better returns on their new-style machines.

Rich Ward, a former lottery employee who now runs his own video lottery establishments in Pierre, suggested Wednesday that the VLC games should be copied into new machines.

Lawyer Bob Riter Jr. of Pierre, representing the Music and Vending Association, suggested that a staggered percentage be adopted in order to make the new games more attractive to owners.

One concept calls for state government receiving a larger share from the VLCs and a smaller share from the new games.

The commission needs to refine its plan in the coming weeks if any legislation is to be proposed for the 2014 legislative session that opens Jan. 14 and concludes March 31.

"These are recommendations. This is a plan. There are a lot of steps to take," commission chairman Bob Hartford of Pierre said. "It's still a process we have to go through."

Attending the strategy meeting was state Revenue Secretary Andy Gerlach. The lottery is part of his department. He said Gov. Dennis Daugaard will make decisions on most of his administration's legislation in mid-December.

Hartford turned to Gerlach and told the audience, "(He) wouldn't be here today if he wasn't planning on taking an active role." Gerlach nodded in response.

Lobbyist Larry Mann of Rapid City asked, "So if we plan to anything in the 2014 session we're on a pretty short fuse?" Replied Gerlach: "That's correct."

How much the Daugaard administration will be willing to attempt in the upcoming session isn't clear yet. Two years ago the administration didn't openly support the bet and machine increases.

Gerlach said 2014 is an "opportunity to tell a story" to legislators.

"I don't think we necessarily need legislation to tell that story," he said. "Believe me, during 2014, there will be thoughts and themes pushed forward to legislators."
