AAA Research: One-In-Five Fatal Crashes Involves Driver Fatigue

SIOUX FALLS — According to new research from the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety, more than one-in-five fatal crashes involves driver fatigue. AAA says these results confirm what safety experts have long suspected: the prevalence of drowsy driving is much greater than official statistics from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) indicate.

With Daylight Saving Time over and the sun setting earlier, AAA urges drivers to recognize the warning signs of driver fatigue and to take action to avoid tragedy during this holiday

'This new research further confirms that drowsy driving is a serious traffic safety problem," warned Peter Kissinger, president and CEO of the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety. "Unfortunately, drivers often underestimate this risk and overestimate their ability to combat drowsiness behind the

The report also found that drowsy driving crashes, a mainstay in recent headlines, are not without consequence. One third of crashes involving a drowsy driver results in injuries and more than 6,000 fatigue-related crashes each year result in at least one fatality. Previous research from the AAA

Foundation revealed that drivers age 19 to 24 are the most likely to admit to driving while drowsy, with 33 percent reporting doing so in the last month. In contrast, drivers age 75+ and drivers age 16 to 18 were the least likely.

Despite the fact that 95 percent of Americans deem it "unacceptable" to drive when they are so tired that they have a hard time keeping their eyes open, more than 28 percent admit to doing so in the last month. Heed the warning signs of drowsy driving:

 The inability to recall the last few miles traveled;

 Having disconnected or wandering thoughts;

· Having difficulty focusing or keeping your eyes open;

 Feeling as though your head is very heavy: Drifting out of your driving lane, perhaps driving on the rumble strips; Yawning repeatedly;

· Inadvertently tailgating other vehi-

 Missing traffic signs. When faced with fatigue, AAA urges drivers to find a safe place to pull over if experiencing any of the drowsy driving symptoms. To remain alert and be safer behind the wheel, AAA suggests motorists: • Get plenty of sleep (at least seven hours), especially the night before a long drive; • Drive at times when you are normally awake; • Schedule a break every two hours or every 100 miles; Avoid heavy foods;

Travel with an alert passenger and take turns driving; Avoid medications that cause drowsiness or other impairment; and • Consult with a sleep specialist or other medical professional if you have trouble getting enough rest or are chronically fatigued.

AAA is highlighting the risks of drowsy driving in support of the National Sleep Foundation's Drowsy Driving Prevention Week, which runs now through Nov. 9.

For more information about drowsy driving, visit the National Sleep Foundation's drowsy driving website at www.DrowsyDriving.org/.
