US Economy Grew At 3.9 Percent Rate In 3rd Quarter

BY MARTIN CRUTSINGER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy grew at a solid 3.9 percent annual rate in the July-September period, even faster than first reported, giving the country its strongest six months of growth in more than a decade.

The third quarter growth rate climbed from an initial estimate of 3.5 percent because of greater spending by consumers and businesses, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday. The figure followed a 4.6 percent surge in the spring, which resulted in the biggest consecutive quarters of growth since 2003.

Analysts believe growth could slow to around 2.5 percent in the current quarter but then accelerate again in 2015. They expect growth of around 3 percent, representing a sustained acceleration in activity six years after the Great Recession.

The economy as measured by the gross domestic product, the country's total output of goods and services, has been on a roller coaster this year. It started with a steep slide in activity in the first three months of the year when GDP contracted at a 2.1 percent rate, largely due to a severe winter. For the third quarter, consumer spending, which accounts for 70 percent of economic activity, grew at a 2.2 percent rate. The figure was an improvement from an initial estimate of 1.8 percent growth. Business investment in equipment shot up at a 10.7 percent rate, an increase from a 7.2 percent initial estimate.

Economists are looking for a solid performance in the final three months of this year but slightly below the third quarter pace. For the entire year, growth is forecast at a modest 2.2 percent, matching the modest increase of 2013.
