

Lawsuit

"The court denied our motion and said we need to do more discovery," she said. "The court said there are more issues that need pursuit."

In another development, the VCDC has added the Eagle Creek shareholders to the lawsuit, Jelen said. The motion seeks to hold those individuals, as well as the business itself, responsible for any damages.

VCDC is also seeking to remove the lawsuit from the federal courts and return it to the circuit court, Jelen said. The legal proceedings would then likely be heard in Vermillion.

"There is no active litigation until we hear from the judge (on the motion for change of venue)," Jelen said.

Once the court rules on the location, the VCDC will seek a quick resolution to the lawsuit, Jelen said.

"We'll be running, and we'll be running fast," she said. "We want to resolve this just as fast as we can and still go places at the VCDC."

With Eagle Creek indicating it wouldn't occupy the building, VCDC executive director Nate Welch said his organization sought other uses for the facility.

At the present time, the VCDC uses the building as the Vermillion Technical Center (VTC), Welch said. The organization continues seeking tenants or a buyer, he added.

"It's a beautiful building and a great asset," he said, adding the VCDC would like to see the site added to the local tax rolls.

The VCDC has sought to make the best of an unexpected situation,

Welch said.

"This hasn't turned out to be the way we wanted it, but you just have to adjust and pivot," he said. "You just need to be flexible, innovative and stay the course."

In the meantime, Welch sees new possibilities for the building and the future.

"We're very pleased and very excited with the opportunities it's brought us," he said. "We have a lot of good things going for us in Vermillion."
