

Studio Art Center To Resume Classes & Search For New Owner

Studio Art Center will begin classes again this November at their new location at 608 W. Eighth St., Yankton. You may have noticed that there has been no activity since September and early October when owner, Lita Stucky was on vacation. Upon returning in October, Stucky discovered there had been a break in the water line in the apartment overhead and has spent the month of October into November getting things put back in order. It is because of this that classes have been delayed until later this month. Phone calls for sign-ups can be made by calling: 665-0954 or 665-4686.

Although the new schedule is not completely set for daytime classes yet, Stucky assures students she will hold classes after school Mondays through Fridays.

Starting Nov. 21, the first Saturday Workshop will be held from 1-4 p.m. The Workshop includes drawing, painting and crafts and is open to students age 6 to adults. Younger students can work on craft projects & painting in the rear craft room and those who want to focus on Fine Arts can work on drawing and painting projects in the large front room of the studio. information, check out www.studioartcenter.com.

The Annual Santa's Workshop option will be included with every Saturday Workshop from Nov. 21. through Saturday, Dec. 19. Students have the option to do a free short program or pay for the full three hour session. On the website there are lots of pictures of Christmas projects students can do during this exciting holiday program, so be sure to check that out. All

Fine Arts classes and Arts & Crafts classes for this current school year will run from November 2015 through mid-May 2016.

By summer of 2016, Stucky plans to make her departure for Oregon where she will be setting up a Studio Art Center in the Pacific Northwest. Stucky is still in search of someone to continue her full-time art program at the 608 W. 8th St. location, or in a different location of their own choosing. Jessi Koch, a former Studio Art Center student, will be offering her art program at the 608 W. St., or in a different location offering her art program under the name of Courage Art Center in the summer of 2016.

Anyone with an interest in managing a full-scale, year-round Creative Arts program may contact Lita Stucky at 665-0954 or look at Business Sale on the studioartcenter.com website.

MMC's Integrated Technology Class is participating in the XQ Super School Project competition by contributing ideas to improve America's school system.

MMC Education Students Work To Reinvent America's School System

Mount Marty Education students are taking part in a national competition to create the new model for America's high schools. Instructor Dr. Candice Climer is leading her Integrated Technology class through XQ's Super School Project competition, with the winning ideas being awarded $50 million to make their ideas a reality.

The Super School Project is a national call for ideas on how to redesign and improve America's school system. The challenge opened on September 11 and the Mount Marty team submitted their idea on the xqsuperschool.org website on November 9. Now, the 12 students are actively seeking feedback from different communities and schools as they will take all this information to submit their final design in February 2016.

"This was a great opportunity to bring real life problem solving and critical thinking into the classroom," said Climer. "These students are changing terminology used in the current school systems and rethinking everything from the layout, polices, extracurricular activities and process that the students take throughout high school. We are building a concept that reaches out to our current generation of students and preparing them for their future by applying their concepts that are taught and using higher level thinking skills."

The Integrating Technology class has named their project Eximius Quest (XQ). The concept will transform the learning atmosphere with student centered learning through the guidance of teachers and administrators to allow students to reach their full potential. The concept will provide students with elective logos in conjunction with prerequisite logos and diverse opportunities needed for individual personal achievement. This will be offered to students with exploratory and discovery learning through real world application.

All the elements of their school will come together in a powerful learning experience for students by:

1. Community being developed through the intra-personal relationships of students, staff and administration
2. Experiences in a diverse range of fields being gained through exploratory and prerequisite logos
3. Ownership being created through an investment of pride in school, education and community
4. Innovativeness gained through modern concepts of technology and hands on learning with access to the latest devices
5. Commitment, dedication and teamwork through the participation of extracurricular activities

After the final ideas and designs are submitted in February, national semi-finalists will be announced in March. Finalists will be chosen in April and the winners announced in August 2016.
