

A Comedy Homecoming

South Dakota-Born Comedy Duo Williams And Ree Set For At Dakota Theatre Nov. 5

When it comes to comedy acts, Williams and Ree need no introduction.

The South Dakota duo, long billed as the "Indian and the White Guy," will bring their act to Yankton on Saturday, Nov. 4 for a one-night only show at the Dakota Theatre.

"We are actually drumming up business," joked Bruce Williams in a phone conference with the Press and Dakotan. "We are out there trying to get some work and get people to come and see us, laugh and have a good time. That is the basis of our tour — to line our pockets with bills."

While the duo has been in Yankton before, it has been several years — and never at a venue like the Dakota Theatre offers.

"That is what we like: that theater atmosphere. It does the best for us," Williams said. "It gives us that kind of Wild West feel."

Chuck Lambert, executive director of Lewis and Clark Theatre Company (LCTC), said the Dakota Theatre is the perfect place in Yankton to see the duo.

"It is a little bit of the history of the theatre," he said. "They were excited about playing in the old opera house. It is a venue that offers the intimacy that they are looking for because — just like most comedy acts — their (act) needs the intimacy to come over. They do well wherever they play, but this is going to be a great fun venue for them."

Williams said people coming to the show can expect to be entertained by the "politically incorrect" banter that the two share on stage.

"We are politically incorrect and have been since our inception," he said. "We have this long and not very historic career, but it has certainly done us well. I think (the audience) can expect to see both the new and old. It is what keeps them coming back. There is a certain amount of reflection and a certain amount of new things that take us in a different direction that no one expects. That is when it is fun. The Indian is just old and bitter and goes on these political diatribes. My job is to interrupt his flow."

Williams said they are billing this tour as the "Summer Of Love" tour.

"We go back to the beginning and tell how we met and were inspired to foist this on the world," he said. "It was all during the 'Summer of Love,' which was 1967-1969. Of course, we met in 1968, which was the heart of the three-summer long Summer of Love. We talk about the hippy movement that we grew up in and the free love — and how we got no free love, because the whole movement just skipped over South Dakota and went into Minnesota. So that is what we are doing: Trying to reclaim that feeling of love in this angry world we live in."

While the duo now live in Tennessee, Williams said coming back to South Dakota is like coming home again.

"We have been in Tennessee since 1984, so it is always fun to get to come back to South Dakota," he said. "We have so many friends and relatives back there, it is like coming home. It's like we never left. We're eternally grateful to the people of South Dakota for supporting us for the last 43 years that we have been doing this. We will always be faithful to the state of South Dakota because it gave us our start."
