Art Forms

Autumn Activity Swirls At YAA

BY JACKIE QUINN

Yankton Area Arts

One of the things that drew me to my new position as Yankton Area Arts Executive Director was that I would be advocating for the arts in all its diverse capacities. Only a few short weeks in this new role, I have found this to be true. I have had the privilege to play a part in presenting: the Teget fine art collection gathered from more than 74 countries; Jennifer White's dynamic collection which challenges Native American art paradigms; the remarkable artistry of our local Ability Building Services group; and the notable talents of our area's Connecting Artists. Like the autumn ribbon of swirling colors wrapping this new season, so too, a vibrant and diverse spectrum unfolds at Yankton Area Arts.

A special three-day inner gallery display leads off our fall exhibit line-up. The works of nine guest artists from Ability Building Services will be featured Oct. 5-7. An artist reception will be held Friday, Oct., 5 from 5-7 p.m. to celebrate the distinct spirit and talents of these individuals, including Gail Bartunek, Shirley Berg, Sandy Bezug, Wayne Friesen, Cindy Dvorak, Kari Wieseler, Karole Coulson, Jim May and Melvin Stangeland.

The outer gallery walls will continue to feature Jennifer White's "My Tribute to the South Dakota Six collection" through Oct. 8. To follow, Connecting Artists will present their Creative Connections Art Show Oct. 12-Nov. 9 with an artist reception slated for Nov. 2 from 5-7 p.m.

Beyond the gallery walls, the YAA "Art of Healing" program continues to partner with Avera Sacred Heart Cancer Center to creatively serve cancer patients and their caregivers on their journeys to wellness. We are currently seeking volunteer teaching artists for our fourth term. Please consider using your strengths to give others strength! Course offerings are limited really only by imagination and have included such things as painting, drawing, jewelry making, woodcarving, poetry, ballroom dancing, yoga, wine-making, journaling, Photoshop, scrapbooking, and holiday crafting. Call the YAA office to join in this worthy endeavor.

Looking ahead, there is no doubt the colors bursting forth now will soon turn to white. Yet, YAA once again makes the annual promise of crimson — the Crimson Door Holiday Show. Preparations are under way for this annual shopping spectacular beginning Monday, Nov. 26, at G.A.R. Hall and running through Dec. 28. Items for sale are unique and handcrafted by artists across the region including such things as soaps, jewelry, wool hats and scarves, children's books, stained glass, wood sculpture, walking sticks, pottery, and much, much more. In conjunction with Crimson Door, YAA will also feature its popular Tour of Homes on Sunday, Dec. 2. Visit www.YanktonAreaArts.org for the developing festive details.

Be sure to mark your calendars with these important dates and stop in for a colorful Yankton Area Arts experience! Become a YAA member and further amplify your experience, including an opportunity to receive your choice from one of ten photos from the Cathy Clatworthy series My Favorite Places, featuring photographs of special locations and landmarks from Yankton and the surrounding area.

Johnson, 'Acoustic Christmas' Slated For Yankton Dec. 20

"A South Dakota Acoustic Christmas" is returning to the holiday season, and will include a performance in Yankton on Thursday, Dec. 20.

"Acoustic Christmas" is a holiday concert with a 19-year musical tradition in South Dakota. After a three-year hiatus, the original group members will reach back to the beginning to visit some of the best-loved songs from the 19 years they performed for South Dakota audiences.

Renowned national guitarist and singer, Michael Johnson, who recorded "Bluer Than Blue" and many other hits and performed many concerts in East River colleges in the 1980s, will join the group in presenting their unique take on the music of Christmas. The group has played various venues in Sioux Falls in the past, but in 2012 the players are again bringing the holiday show to Yankton.

'Wentworth Hall' Is Flawed, But It's A Decent Read

"Wentworth Hall," by Abby Grahame, Simon & Schuster BFYR, 2012. 288 pages.

BY PAT HANSEN

Have you ever tried to keep up a front? Tried to make others think you are good at singing or at sports when you're really not? If so, you may have sympathy for the Darlington family.

They're an old-money family in 1912 England. They've always had money, always been respected as a high-society family, always led a certain lifestyle. But it's all crumbling down. No longer does each young lady of the family have her own personal maid-one maid cares for two, then three of them. The patriarch is looking to sell off family heirlooms in an effort to cover the gap, then says it's for insurance purposes that he's having these items appraised.

Seventeen-year-old Maggie has just returned home from a year in Paris. Once a boisterous and lively gal, she's now withdrawn and quiet. Actually, her parents are happy about that — it makes her much easier to control and hopefully more marriageable. A marriage to someone with lots of money would be just what the family needs to save itself from its financial woes.

Enter Teddy and Jessica, 17-year-old twins from Africa, also from a moneyed family. However, their parents have both died. In the iron-clad will they can't touch any of their money until they turn 18. Maggie's father graciously opens his home to these children of an old friend. That Teddy is rich, handsome, and not married has nothing at all to do with his generosity.

When an on-going supposedly fiction story of the "Worthless" family is published in the newspaper it soon becomes obvious that the Darlingtons are the family being depicted. But no one knows who would do such a nasty thing or why. Some have their guesses. The servant girls have eyes and ears and know much more than they let on. And Jessica, the orphan twin, seems to be disdainful of the Darlington.

Meanwhile Maggie faces marriage to Teddy, a man she doesn't love, or a rich overweight duke
