ATLANTA (AP) — Just like last year, the Braves lost out on a spot in the NL division series to the St. Louis Cardinals. Only this time, Atlanta was knocked out with the help of what will be remembered as one of the most disputed infield fly calls in baseball history.

Trailing by three runs, the Braves would have had the bases loaded with one out in the eighth inning. Instead they had runners on second and third with two outs, didn't score again and lost 6-3 Friday night in baseball's first, oneand-done, wild-card playoff game.

Just like that, the focus shifted from Chipper Jones' impending retirement and the end of Kris Medlen's winning streak to a call that led to a 19-minute delay caused by enraged fans throwing debris and a protest by Braves manager Fredi Gonzalez.

"Ultimately I think that when we look back on this loss, we need to look at ourselves in the mirror.' Jones said. "We put ourselves in that predicament, down 6-2. You know, that call right there is kind of a gray area. I don't know. But I'm not willing to say that that particular call cost us the ballgame. Ultimately, three errors cost us the ballgame, mine probably being the biggest.'

Jones leaves with just one World Series title, in 1995.

'Today my heart is broken," he said. "Not for me, my heart is broken for my teammates and my coaching staff, and all these fans that have been so great to us this vear.'

The call was later than is usual on an infield fly, a rule designed to prevent fielders from deliberately letting balls fall in attempts for a double play. This ball landed at least 50 feet beyond the infield.

Gonzalez ran onto the field and argued the call with Holbrook and other members of the umpire crew.

Holbrook, crew chief Jeff Kellogg and umpire supervisor Charlie Reliford defended the call as coming on a play in which Kozma could make the play with "ordinary ef-

Ordinary? At least 50 feet from the infield?

"Well, it's a judgment," Reliford said in a postgame news conference that included MLB executive vice president Joe Torre, a former manager of both the Braves and Cardinals.

"I think as you watch that tape, the guy was not only under it and clearly waving that he had it, I think he had reasonably stopped his momentum, and he was under it and it was clearly the correct call," Reliford said.

Asked about the timing of the call, Reliford said an infield fly call should not be made before the ball begins its descent.

Holbrook said he "absolutely" thought he made the right call after watching a replay.

years," Hermanson said. "This was one of those nights were things just kind of fell into our lap.'

Yankton, 5-2, hosts winless Mitchell next Friday at Crane-Youngworth Field before traveling to undefeated Brandon Valley on October 18 to close out the regular season.

Likness was hopeful that his team can get healthy during the final two weeks of the season and possibly even earn a first round playoff bye. To do that, they will likely need a strong effort against the Lvnx.
