Drought Makes Winter Wheat Risky For Neb. Farmers

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Planting a crop is always a risk, but Nebraska farmers may be taking a bigger gamble than usual this year as they plant winter wheat amid continuing drought.

Nearly 89 percent of Nebraska is in extreme or exceptional drought, according to the U.S. Drought Monitor compiled by the National Drought Mitigation Center at the University of Nebraska-

Lincoln. That means farmers who plant now may not have enough field moisture for winter wheat to sprout. But those who wait for rain risk a killing frost before wheat roots can withstand the cold, experts told the Lincoln Journal Star. Because of soil types and other factors, most farmers in the state's prime wheat-growing areas in south-central and southwestern Nebraska can't wait for spring rains to plant corn or soybeans.

In alternating years, wheat is planted in fields left unplanted to boost moisture re-

"If you've got the ground and the seed and everything, you try to wait for your best opportunity," said Royce Schaneman, of the Nebraska Wheat Board. "But doing nothing just puts you further behind.'

As of Oct. 1, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said, winter wheat planting in Nebraska was 64 percent complete, compared with an average of 77 percent for the date. Emergence was at 16 percent, well below the 46 percent average.

Dan Hughes, a wheat farmer near Venango in southwest Nebraska, has planted about 75 percent of his crop and said his big fear was light rain.

"Less than half an inch and seed would sprout, but it wouldn't be enough moisture for it to root down," Hughes said.

There is some moisture 5 inches down, Hughes said, but wheat usually is planted 2 inches deep. If the roots can't reach the moisture. then the sprouts die, he said.

Backed By GOP, Fischer Extols A Bipartisan Approach

BY GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

we have a long list.

LINCOLN, Neb. — If elected, GOP U.S. Senate candidate Deb Fischer has promised she'll work with Democrats. But she was at the helm of an all-Republican group of lawmakers Monday.

Fischer, a conservative state senator from Valentine, announced the endorsements of 75 current and former state lawmakers. She is running against Democrat Bob Kerrey for the seat being vacated by Democratic Sen. Ben Nel-

Both Fischer and Kerrey, a former Nebraska governor who is looking to reclaim his old Senate seat, have pitched themselves as the best candidate to reach across party lines. In brief remarks, Fischer said the coalition represented a broad cross-section of the Asked whether her campaign had found any Democrats to join her at the news conference, Fischer replied: "I have a great group of senators here behind me, and I'm very excited that they're here.

"So that's a no?" one reporter asked. "I have a great group of senators," Fischer repeated, "and Kerrey has vowed on the campaign trail to challenge his own party's leadership, saying he would cause just as much trouble for Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid as he would for GOP Senate leader Mitch McConnell.

Fischer pointed to measures she designated as "priority bills" during her time in the Legislature, including proposals introduced by two Democrats: former Omaha state Sen. Pat Bourne and current Sen. Annette Dubas, of Fullerton.

"I have a proven record of working with Democrats, prioritizing their bills and getting those bill passed," Fischer said. "I say if you look at Mr. Kerrey's record, where he voted with his party close to 90 percent of the time — that would tell a Kerrey spokesman Chris Triebsch said the absence of Democratic endorsements showed Fischer would take a partisan approach if voters sent her to Washington.

"Senator Kerrey would work with both Republicans and Democrats to shake up Washington," Triebsch said. "The contrast is clear. It's more of the same from Senator Fischer."

Speaker of the Legislature Mike Flood, a Republican who was elected the same year as Fischer, said his colleague served the state "honorably, honestly and very effectively," and built coalitions with Democrats.

'We know her values, we know her convictions, and we know her unrivaled work ethic," Flood said. "Deb Fischer is one of the most honest and ethical people I know.'

Giago: Education Needed On Origin Of S.D. Holiday

RAPID CITY (AP) — Long-time journalist Tim Giago worries that the meaning of Native American Day will be lost without education by schools and the media.

Study Looks At Wind Energy Boost For South Dakota Counties

SIOUX FALLS (AP) — Wind energy projects have provided a big economic boost to counties in wind-rich states such as the Dakotas, a new federal study has found.

Researchers with the Economic Research Service, National Renewable Energy Laboratory and Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory studied economic data from 1,000 counties in a dozen states from 2000 to 2008. They concluded that each megawatt of installed wind power led to an additional $11,000 in personal income and half a job per county, the Argus Leader newspaper reported.

The economic benefits can come in the form of direct employment during construction and operation, lease payments to landowners, demand for local goods and services, tax payments or other spending. South Dakota has 784 megawatts of installed wind power, according to the federal Energy Department. That would equate to an economic boost of more than $8.6 million. North Dakota has 1,469 megawatts, which would equate to more than $16 million. The results are not generalizable outside "The silver lining: I've been encouraged by some smaller wind groups community initiatives — folks looking to get a wind project developed in their area. It's under the radar screen, and these folks will be ready to move when the market opens up. That's one of the few lights that I see in an otherwise dark forecast.

In North Dakota, LM Wind Power, a maker of wind turbine blades, announced last month it is laying off more than 300 workers in Grand Forks. In South Dakota, Molded Fiber Glass, which also makes wind turbine blades, announced it was laying off nearly 100 employees in Aberdeen. Officials with both companies cited the uncertainty of the federal tax credit.

Two Sentenced For Stealing From Rosebud Tribe 2009 and December 2010.

ROSEBUD (AP) — Two Rosebud residents have been sentenced in federal court for stealing from the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

KGFX reports that 32-year-old Nathan Janis and 39-year-old Barbara Duysak were accused of submitting false payment request forms to the tribe's child care services program. Authorities say Duysak worked as an administrator for the program during the time the money was embezzled, between October

Both Duysak and Janis pleaded guilty in Duysak has been sentenced to two months in custody, six months of home confinement and about $42,433 in restitution. Janis has been sentenced to six months in jail, six months at a halfway house and about $33,816 in restitution.

Fire Destroys Van, Building In Sherman

SHERMAN (AP) — A fire in the eastern South Dakota town of Sherman destroyed a van and a mobile home being used for storage. KELO-TV reports that firefighters had to deal with a series of small explosions when ammunition inside the van

The fire early Sunday started in the van and spread to the home, which was not being lived in. Jeanette Smit owned the mobile home and said she had just bought the van at an auction on Saturday and hadn't had time to remove the ammunition left by the previous owner.

The cause of the fire wasn't immediately determined.

Fire Threatens Structures Near R.C.

RAPID CITY (AP) — Authorities say a malfunctioning vehicle likely sparked a weekend wildfire that scorched 81 acres of land and threatened a handful of structures southeast of the Rapid City airport.

Rapid Valley Assistant Fire Chief Casey Warren tells the Rapid City Journal that the Sunday fire burned only grass, but one person was evacuated as a precaution.
