from cities, counties and school districts.

News organizations had sought to require government boards and commissions to record closed meetings. The recordings would have been sealed unless someone complained that a meeting had been illegally closed. A judge would then review the recording and determine if it could be made public.

South Dakota's open meetings law requires state and local boards and commissions to give notice of a meeting and its agenda at least 24 hours in advance. Those meetings can be closed to the public only if the discussions are about personnel issues, student performance, litigation or contracts, employee contract negotiations, pricing strategies by public owned businesses, and certain economic development matters.

The panel decided to abandon the proposal to record closed sessions after it became clear members were split on the issue.

Supporters said recordings would provide the best evidence of whether a board or commission met in a closed session to discuss issues that should have been handled in public. But representatives of local governments said some boards and commissions would have trouble making such recordings, which would also discourage free-wheeling discussion.

"To have that recording there really hampers their discussions," said Wade Pogany, executive director of the Associated School Boards of South Dakota. Seth Tupper, editor of the

Mitchell Daily Republic, said boards and commissions could easily record closed meetings by buying a $50 digital recorder and switching it on. One significant measure endorsed by the panel would make criminal mug shots public records. Such mug shots now are usually released only when someone escapes from custody. The proposal also clarifies that police logs of calls for service can be released to reveal the date, time and general location and subject of the call, a practice already followed by many law enforcement agencies.

Another proposal supported by the panel would make more committees, subcommittees and task forces subject to the open meetings law.

In addition, three-member boards of townships, road districts and small towns would not violate the open meetings law if two or more members met to do work previously approved in a public meeting. In most townships, the elected supervisors also are the ones who actually fix roads or bridges.

The task force also recommended that government agencies be required to consider the ease and affordability of public access to information when they set up electronic record-keeping systems. Those agencies also would have to tell people what information they hold to help people understand what they can request.

The panel rejected a proposal that would have required government agencies to disclose settlement agreements. Supporters said agencies should reveal such settlements because they involve the spending of government funds, but state officials said disclosing settlements would encourage other people to seek similar payments in similar situations.

Katherine Logan

Katherine Mary (Hausman) Logan, age 96 of Yankton, South Dakota, died on October 5, 2012, at her daughter's home in Noble, Oklahoma.

Mass of Christian Burial will be 10:30 a.m. Friday, October 12, 2012 at Saint Benedict Catholic Church in Yankton with the Rev. Ken Lulf officiating. Burial will be in the Sacred Heart Catholic Cemetery.

Visitations will begin at 5 p.m. Thursday, October 11, 2012 at the Opsahl-Kostel Funeral Home and Crematory in Yankton with a 7 p.m. rosary followed by a video tribute and a 7:30 p.m. Scripture service. Visitations will resume one hour prior to the service at the church.

Pallbearers will be her Grandchildren. Honorary pallbearers will be her Great-Grandchildren and Great-Great Grandchildren.

Katherine was born on August 30, 1916, to John and Rose (Bruder) Hausman in Saint Helena, Nebraska. She grew up on a farm in the Saint Helena, Ne-braska area. She married Leslie Melvin Logan on September 17, 1935, in Crofton, Nebraska. Leslie died on September 26, 2003, at the age of 89 years. She and Leslie lived on a farm west of Yankton. Throughout her life she was a devoted and loving Mother, putting her own needs aside to take care of her children, grandchildren and greatgrandchildren. Birthdays were never forgotten throughout the year, as this was an all important way to show her loved ones that she never forgot them. Everywhere she went, dear friendships were formed. Katherine was a member of the Catholic Ladies Clubs in the Saint Benedict Church: Rosary Makers, the Extension and the St. Isidore Circle Clubs. Her strongest passions were her flowers and sewing. Her patriotism even showed through as she always had the American Flag flying at her home. She considered voting both a privilege and an obligation. It was always a serious responsibility to her. She could recite the Preamble to the Constitution Word for Word, because as she would say, "It's very important."

tillers. For 20 years she was an aid to the nurses at Avera Sacred Heart Hospital. She was always willing to do what needed to be done and do it with a smile.

Whatever Katherine did was done with her heart and her endless energy. Reading everything in sight was mandatory for her. Even social outings were focused on relationships as was every action she did. Gardening and sewing were special ways she was able to give to others. She took care of her children by sewing clothes for them. Her garden and flowers were not her own, as she took great joy in bringing flowers back to full bloom that weren't cared for properly and then sharing them with others. This giving attitude was always a part of Katherine, and it formed the basis of the long lasting relationship she had with her Grandchildren, Great-Grandchildren, Great-Great-Grandchildren, as well as their parents.

Katherine put her trust in Jesus as her Savior and knew she was going to heaven to be part of God's family.

She is survived by her 3 children and their spouses, Fred and Marlene (Logan) Schmidt, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Block Grant, which runs year to year. However, officials are optimistic that the funding will be available for years to come.

"The counselor has been working at YHS and YMS with the current drug and alcohol policies in place at the schools," said Dr. Tom Stanage, CEO of Lewis and Clark Behavioral Health. "This has been a very positive process for Lewis and Člark and ÝSD. We need to see more of these kinds of things in the community." Already this school year, there has been six drug and alcohol in-cidents at YHS, after 12 all of last year.

"We continue to be concerned when we even have one incident at school. Our goal is to eliminate any incidents at school and to also guide our students in making better choices outside of school, Kindle said. "However, we can't do this alone. We need the help of our community and parents. We all need to work together like we have in obtaining the counselor.'

There are many long-term goals of the program that officials hope to fulfill in the future.

Those goals include delaying adolescent's initial use of alcohol, tobacco and other drugs; decreasing their use of those substances; increasing students' perception of their harm; changing adolescents' norms and expectations about substance use; building and enhancing social

She added that programs like this can help foster awareness, education and opportunities for discussion around unpopular topics of alcohol and drugs for students and parents.

"My hope is that people will consider thinking about their options, respond rather than react, before making a decision - whatever that decision might be," she said

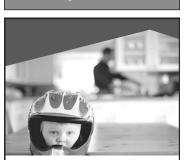

Kindle said that one of the biggest impacts he has seen the program have is the positive reaction that students, parents and community members have shown to the district for recognizing the problem.

"Equally important for me is that we have not buried our head in the sand or tried to pretend we don't have problem when we do,' he added. "Above all other things, we are doing something to help our students and parents.'

"This whole process has been nothing but positive," Kashas added. "Positive responses from parents, students and staff as well as positive partnerships within the community."
