Jepsen

ishing third on TV's "Canadian Idol," she released her debut album in 2008, the singer/songwriter-styled "Tug of War." In 2011, she offered the single "Call Me Maybe" on 604 Records, cofounded by Nickelback's singer, Chad Kroeger. "Kiss," her debut U.S. album, was issued last month.

The new disc is more electropop, reflecting Jepsen's love of Madonna and the influence of Katy Perry. Her new single, "This Kiss," was written in collaboration with LMFAO's Redfoo and the guy Jepsen definitely calls her beau, singer-songwriter Matthew Koma.

The Redfoo connection came by happenstance. Unaccustomed to paparazzi, Jepsen was being pursued at the Los Angeles airport when Redfoo and his security guard came to the rescue, inviting the newly minted star into a private airport lounge.

"We became really fast friends and bonded over our musical taste," she recalled. "We decided we should write something together but he was traveling one way and I was traveling the opposite way. So we ended up connecting that night late, writing a chorus over the phone. He brought Matthew Koma into the loop. And the three of us did the rest via email, text and phone calls. The song was all done virally."

Her second Top 10 hit, "Good Time," came through another email collaboration, with Owl City, aka Adam Young. Their schedules weren't cooperating so Young told her to record her part and he'd piece the recording together.

"I was in Canada," said Jepsen, who saw Owl City in concert in Vancouver a few years ago. "It was a late-night session after the Junos (Canada's Grammys) at 3 in the morning. I sang my piece and sent it to him and by the time I got back to L.A., it was playing on the "Good Time" made it to No. 8 on Billboard. (Coincidentally, Koma, her guy, is on tour opening for Owl City. Small world, huh?)

Jepsen's album features a duet with Bieber that came about in impromptu fashion, as well. After signing a U.S. recording contract with Schoolboy Records (run by Bieber's manager, Scooter Braun), she was invited to Los Angeles to meet key staffers and Bieber, who was in the studio recording his latest album, "Believe."

'We really hit it off," she said. "He showed me a song called 'Beautiful' and asked if I liked it. Of course, I really dug it. He suggested I sing on it. I was beyond floored. But he meant 'right now.' It ended up being one of those nerve-racking but totally awesome experiences that I'll never forget."

Jepsen is fond of collaborating. She's even penned material with Nickelback frontman Kroeger.

Wait! The innocent popster writing with the raunchy rocker?

"I don't think of him as raunchy or me as innocent, necessarily. I just think of us as two writers." Jepsen said. "I'd say from my history of collaborating, it's never good to write with people who bring to the table exactly what you already offer. It's good to go with someone who is completely out of your genre and style and then you create something new together.

"It was really neat to pick away at his mind and see how he works as a writer. We wrote a few songs together but nothing that made the album. He's all about lyrics, just like me. So we had some fun tug of wars.'

Of course, Kroeger and all these collaborators have Jepsen's phone number. How many times has she given it out since "Call Me Maybe" took off?

"Radio announcers do think it's very witty and original of them to give me my line back to me: 'Hey Carly, I just met you," she said. "I've given out a lot of fake phone numbers.'
