USD Works To Help Older Adults Struggling With Social Isolation

SIoux FALLS — Students and faculty from the University of South Dakota School of Health Sciences are collaborating with The Evangelical Lutheran Good Samaritan Society and Older Adults Technology Services (OATS) to help older adults combat social isolation through AARP Foundation's Connecting to Community pilot program.

"Social isolation is quite prevalent and debilitating in older adults," explained Jarod T. Giger, Ph.D., M.S.W., L.C.S.W., assistant professor, USD Department of Social Work. "I think the model we are using in the Connecting to Community program could also be applied to other at-risk populations that suffer from social isolation, including older adult veterans and older adult caregivers. The possibilities are limitless."

To prevent social isolation, which affects close to one-in-five older Americans, increasing social engagement among seniors is significant. The problem in the past was a lack of programs available for seniors to learn how to use social media. Now, with Connecting to Community, 11 USD Occupational Therapy students, one USD Social Work student and six older adult volunteers are working with older adults to teach them everything from how to use an iPad to posting photos on Facebook.

"Why not teach older adults to use the iPad? Why not work toward creating a better, more socially connected life for older adults?" Giger asked. "I have had some amazing conversations with our older adult volunteers and participants. One participant shared with me that she could not wait to learn how to Skype so that she could see her new grandchild."

OATS, an organization that provides technology training services to seniors, wrote the curriculum that the volunteer instructors are using to teach the older adult participants. OATS also provided three days of training to the volunteer instructors prior to the start of the program and will continue to support them for the duration of the six-month project. The volunteer instructors will teach and train more than 50 older adult participants in the Sioux Falls area in 90 minute class sessions that are held twice per week. The older adult participants are also offered the opportunity to attend an open lab session to practice the skills that they learn in class.

"This program is a win-win for everyone," stated Stacy Smallfield, Dr. O.T., M.S.O.T., O.T.R/L, associate professor, USD Department of Occupational Therapy. "The older adult participants get to learn how to build and maintain meaningful relationships using contemporary technology while the student volunteer instructors have the opportunity to hone their skills in teaching and developing therapeutic rapport with the older adult population."

Giger also pointed out that the Good Samaritan Society has been very supportive of and engaged with the Departments of Social Work and Occupational Therapy along with the research within the School of Health Sciences to make the Connecting to Community program a success.

"We are very fortunate to collaborate with the Good Samaritan Society," added Giger. "Working with the Good Samaritan Society is akin to working in an idea factory. I anticipate that as we move forward and begin our analysis of the Connecting to Community program, future larger scale ideas will emerge."

Vermillion Museum Offers NMM Tour

VERMILLION — The Edith B. Siegrist Vermillion Public Library Books In Context Series will offer a lively and informative tour at the National Music Museum, as Curator Deborah Check Reeves broadens the context for our monthly book selection, "Beethoven's Hair: An Extraordinary Historical Odyssey and a Scientific Mystery Solved," by Russell Martin. This short tour is set for 3 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 17.

The tour will enable viewers to look at the instruments of Beethoven's day and learn more about how the technology influenced Beethoven's music and vice versa.

Discussion of "Beethoven's Hair" will be led by Bruce Kelley at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 23, at the library. Copies of the book are still available at the Library.

The National Music Museum is located on Clark Street on the USD campus. Call the Library for more information on these events: 605-677-7060.

ON THIS DATE

75 YEARS AGO

Monday, October 10, 1938

- Crowds at the annual Gurney-Yankton Fall Festival, which closed on Saturday night in the downtown district with the closing of the carnival company shows and at the House of Gurney, Inc., on Sunday evening, picked up on Saturday and Sunday to bring the week total up to about the normal of past years.

- The first pigeon show to be held in Yankton, for a number of years, closed Saturday night on a two-day exhibit which according to pigeon fanciers, was one of the finest shows seen in the northwest for some time. While the show was not a large one, there being something more than 200 birds shown.

50 YEARS AGO

Thursday, October 10, 1963

- Leg of lamb, offered at bargain prices, tops the list of weekend specials in supermarkets and neighborhood stores this week. A big Eastern supermarket chain is featuring lamp legs at 49 cents a pound, off 20 cents from last week. The oven-ready variety is tagged at 57 cents a pound, also off 20 cents.

- On October 5, the University Museum acquired the ancient tribal drum of the Northern Ponca Indians. The drum, which may be nearly a century old, was turned over to James Howard, director of the museum, by its last keeper, Thomas Knudsen, a Ponca Indian of Niobrara, Neb.

Monday, October 10, 1988

- Wakonda basketball coach Ron Flynn picked up his 200th career coaching victory Saturday, and on the way his Warriorettes captured the Tri-Valley Conference Tournament title, the next 100 wins may come pretty fast. The Green Wave rallied over Viborg, 80-43, in the championship game, which also marked the ninth win for the Warriorettes in an unblemished season.

- Reported cases of domestic violence could double this year in the state, and the coordinator for volunteer agencies dealing with the victims says its time for state government to pitch in. Carol MacKee of the South Dakota Coalition Against Domestic Violence said her group will ask the state Legislature to open an Office on Family Violence and Sexual Assault in Pierre.
