Daily opinions from the P&D Sports Staff on local and national high school, college and pro sports.

When any team loses a game, I've come to expect difficult interviews to follow. And I completely understand that. No one wants to have that difficult conversation following a loss.

For the first time my expectations were not met, and I was pleasantly surprised. Wednesday night I covered the Mount Marty volleyball match against fifth-ranked Northwestern. The Lancers were shut out in three sets, but when I talked to head coach Candice Climer following the game, she met me with enthusiasm and inspiration for the rest of the season.

She told me she was proud of her team for sticking with Northwestern, seeing as the Lancers actually held the lead for most of their second set. Her players were even ecstatic. Everyone I talked to couldn't wait to to compete for the rest of the season.

And they've got a good reason. If the Lancers can contend with Northwestern, only losing by five points in set one and three and two points in set two, they've got a good shot for the rest of the season. I've followed the Lancers for over a year, and I can tell you this is the best volleyball I've ever seen

Not only were the Lancers able to contend with Northwestern, they're starting young players. Two sophomores and one freshman hit the court Wednesday night to start for MMC.

When I had the chance to preview their season earlier this year for our fall preview section, Climer brought up a good point: She's finally getting her own recruits on her team. The difference is visible, and in one more year every member of the team will be a player she recruited herself.

Mount Marty is currently 0-9 in the Great Plains Athletic Conference, but Climer said she has faith her team can take enough wins to get them into the post-season tournament.

The Lancers finished 1-15 in the GPAC each of the last two seasons, putting them in last place. MMC was 0-16 for the 2010 season.

Mount Marty faces Presentation today (Friday) and then hits the road for Concordia on Saturday. Looking forward, Climer and her team are out for revenge. The Lancers lost to Concordia earlier this season in five games, with their freshman setter filling in.
