Wainwright following a single by rookie Xander Bogaerts and a walk by Stephen Drew, took a called strike, watched a ball and then fouled off a pitch. When Wainwright left a 79mph hanger up, he pounced. If the ball hadn't bounced into the stands, Drew would have scored, too, but he came around on Jacoby Ellsbury's single as Ross was thrown out by Shane Robinson.

Ross isn't out there for his speed. He's usually not on the field for his bat.

In an October of unexpected surprises, Ross provided the biggest one for Boston.

this ballgame against Dallas," he said. "That's what's most important.'

Frazier declined to identify a starting quarterback for the Cowboys game. The Vikings have changed starting quarterbacks, either because of injury, ineffectiveness or both, five times in their last six games, and all indications are another change will be made Christian Ponder started against the Packers because the recently acquired Josh Freeman had a concussion. But Ponder failed to seize the opportunity after being benched a month ago, looking skittish in the pocket and unable to work through his progression of receivers with any efficiency.

Veteran Matt Cassel is the only quarterback to win a game for the Vikings this year, but Frazier said Monday that Freeman or Ponder will start against the Cowboys.

"He's done everything we've asked him to," Frazier said of Cassel. "He's practiced well, prepared well. He was ready yesterday if needed be, and he'll continue to work as hard he can. I don't know if there's any one thing I can point to and say why it's Christian and Josh in this determination."

As long as Freeman is fully healthy, he is the likely choice to face the Cowboys. He had a terrible debut against the Giants two weeks ago, but the Vikings want to get a long look at him to see if he could be their quarterback of the future.

And while Frazier has heard fans calling for his ouster, the team still seems to stand firmly behind him. "Coach can't get out there
