Rocky

pitch that the show isn't long, there aren't a ton of lines and he would be flexible with my schedule. I didn't think (the play) would happen, but I didn't give him a definite 'no.'

"Once I decided to audition, Keith reeled me in. It looked like it would be a lot of fun, and I told Keith I would love to be on board. I was all in.

Fokken admitted some initial inhibitions and awkwardness about the role. However, he has become comfortable with the costume and has decided to have fun portraying the mad scientist.

"I tried to invent my character from scratch, but this particular role is so iconic," he said. "Tim Curry is such a strong character, that it would be foolish not to emulate people like

Fokken has also become a big fan of the show's 1970s rock

"The music is awesome," he said. "My dad was really into the rock and roll of the 1960s and 1970s. He grew up with it, and this show is his kind of music.'

Yankton High School senior Cody Geary is making his L&C debut as Frank's creation, Rocky. Geary's previous roles include the musical "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" which he admits is a far cry from "Rocky Horror."

"It's edgy and different than what I normally do," he said of his current role.

However, he welcomes the challenge. "I hadn't seen (the role of Rocky) before. But now that I've watched it, I plan to stay close to that version," he Geary enjoys the physicality of his role. He speaks only 107 words in the play, meaning most of his stage presence consists of non-verbal communication.

In particular, Geary looks forward to the midnight production — and not necessarily the audience's reaction.

"The midnight performance is close to the bars' closing time (of 2 a.m.), so it'll be interesting to see the reaction of people on the street (as the play lets out)," he said with a laugh.

University of South Dakota junior Brianna Adams plays Janet. The Lincoln, Nebraska, native was talked into playing the role when a friend couldn't take the part.

However, Adams welcomes the opportunity to play the role.

"I have had an obsession with 'Rocky Horror' since high school. I have seen it on Netflix," she said. "In the bigger cities, all my friends have seen it. But when I came here my freshman year, no one had seen

Adams believes her role as Janet provides the most freedom when it comes to acting. "Janet goes on this fun journey and undergoes a discovery about herself," Adams said. 'She has the biggest transformation of any character." WHAT TO EXPECT?

Goeden isn't sure what to expect in terms of attendance and audience participation.

"This show is a phenomenon, but I'm also concerned," he said. "There are those who have a huge recognition of it, and others who have never seen it because it's stayed under the radar. The 'Rocky Horror' segment on (the television show) 'Glee' expanded the audience for it."

Audiences will enjoy the spoof of the 1950s and 1960s Frankenstein movies and the entire monster genre, Goeden predicted. However, the show also spoofs the free love mentality of the 1960s and 1970s, he added.

Goeden gave his kudos to those who work behind the scene to produce the trademark music, dancing, lighting and technical aspects. He also credits the tight-knit family atmosphere — including the strong contributions by the younger members – that has developed during rehearsals.

'The show is quirky and goofy. It was a bad movie, but that's what makes it even more fun," he said. "I'm both anxious and nervous about directing it. We have remained faithful to the show and added our own quirks. It's high energy for 1 1/2 hours." Geary and Fokken said they highly anticipate the audience participation.

"In theater, you always hear about the fourth wall, where you're not supposed to interact with the audience," Geary said. "But here, you make comments and interact with the audience. I plan to enjoy the ride."

Fokken is ready to take whatever the audience gives

"If they throw a slice of toast at me, I may pick it up and take a bite out of it," he said.
