Harvest

“We started with more things that were geared toward the family, things you can do with all ages. That was really important to us: that it was appealing to younger people,” Clatworthy said. “The Friday is Halloween, so most of the trick-or-treating, the parade and the costume party is all celebrating Halloween. Then Saturday is more about celebrating the harvest. We still have a touch of Halloween on Saturday with a ghost train and the spooky Meridian Bridge.”

She noted that with Halloween falling around the weekend — and will for the next three years — it was perfect timing to begin what they hope will become a tradition in downtown Yankton.

Clatworthy noted that the festival’s participants have all been very excited to get involved and because of that, the idea basically fell into place.

“The way the program was designed, we just had to find people that would take or commit to events,” she said. “The Dakota Territorial Museum said right away in January ‘We will take the Waffle feed.’ Because of that passion, they have been working on it all year. That is what it takes to make this event work.”

Another group involved is the United Way, which is sponsoring the corn pit.

“They loved the idea of the buried treasure,” Clatworthy said. “So, they took that and developed it further. They have ‘treasure’ maps for the kids to follow and are dressed up like pirates. It has just carried on that way.”

Clatworthy said there were some things that just logistically the group could not offer. But she is thrilled with everything being offered.

“The downtown is gearing up for the parade and Zombie Walk, the costume party planners have set the stage to ‘howl at the moon’ along with The Lugnuts, the waffles will be hot and ready to eat Saturday morning, the children’s Ghost Train is fired up ready to take trips across the historic Meridian Bridge to the Spooky Forest, the Corn Pit will be full of 567 bushels with buried treasure to digup, the hay bale maze is waiting for animal trackers and the pigs are kicking up their heels training for the big race — hungry for their ‘Oreo cookie treat,’” Clatworthy said. “The farmers and crafters will have the market stocked, ready to shop. The chili will be ready to feast on, and the streets will be full of music — all to put you in the festive mood and reflect upon the coming holiday season.”

Clatworthy said if you asked her how to help right now, she would ask for a couple more weeks to prepare, but she knows at some point you just have to let go and do it.

“Everybody needs a couple days off to relax, socialize and let their hair down — especially Friday night,” she said.

“We want everyone to enjoy the season and the harvest. People worked hard during the harvest. If you look at the economic impact as far as the tax revenue, that keeps the city healthy and we need that, very much so, and the tourism. We can build on this year’s festival and grow it into something very big. It has already branched out into more than I expected it to be. It is going to be very exciting see.”

“The whole message of this event is so relevant to keeping our community healthy. When people take their business out of town, they are taking tax dollars out of our economy. They are taking our ability to hire people out of the community. They are taking away our opportunity to give benefits back to Yankton.”

Deb Miller, manager of CherryBerry, said she felt the event was a great way to get involved with the community and hopefully reach people who may not know that the store has opened in the community.

“I just thought it was a good way to let people know we are here,” she said. “We have a nice selection and offer a great place to hang out. We want people to know they don’t have to leave Yankton to get to have a special place to have a party or to cater an event. We do that all right here. We want to be a part of the community.”

She noted that while they didn’t have a lot of people use the coupons this weekend, she knows that every little bit gives back to Yankton.

“While the response wasn’t huge, we are trying different specials and events to see what will attract people to our store in Yankton,” Miller said. “It is a matter of learning what people think and want, then giving it to them so they in return support us.”

That effort of learning the community and what they want is something Munyer said is huge for maintaining a good relationship with his customers.

“We decided to run the special not just on the 25th but for three days,” he said. “That gave everyone an opportunity to take advantage of the special. By making it so it is not so limited, we have found it will be more accessible to people, and more customers will come in and support shopping local, not just our store.”

He added that the community has been great about supporting local fundraising efforts held at the store via its roundup program, where customers can round up their total sale to the nearest dollar with the donation going to the noted cause. In the past few months, the store has held roundups for the Yankton Boys and Girls Club, Breast Cancer Awareness and for the local school’s music and arts programs.

“By shopping local, you are allowing the businesses in town to hold events like these and give back,” he said. “If everyone would remember to think about staying home first, shopping local first, they would make a huge impact on the community.”
