That puts a little pressure on you sometimes because we haven't been in a situation yet where we've got the target on our back. and the JO experience came in handy "Volleyball isn't a sport where you can practice on your own," Fathke said. "So that worked to our advantage."

While it was valuable experience for the Cavaliers, it only helped build the excitement for the fall, according to senior setter Alie Adams.

"During the summer, I was so excited to get started," she said. "I knew we could be pretty strong, and we all got so much experience.'

It was that kind of preseason work that enabled Bon Homme to jump out to a quick start this season.

While the Cavaliers won their first 10 matches, it was ultimately a pair of victories within a four-day span in September that may have really made the state tournament a realistic goal.

The first was Sept. 19 against Wagner. The second was Sept. 22 against Wagner. In the past, it had been teams like Wagner that had prevented Bon Homme from advancing out of its region tournament.

'They're always really good," Sestak said. "We haven't beaten Wagner in a really long time.'

Even before those two wins over Wagner, the Cavaliers had a feeling they could be in for a special season because of their tight-knit relationship, McAllister said.

We have a bond that I don't think every team has," she said. "I don't think I've seen a team hug each other so much after a win like we do.' And how does that camaraderie translate to on-the-court success during a match? "It helps slow you down and relax you," Sestak said. "You get more excited for each other when you all get along. Even though Bon Homme's varsity roster features 10 players, seven see regular action, according to Fathke. Juniors Sierra Mesman and Jeni Schmidt, along with the six seniors, have seen quite a bit of action this season - a season that has helped put Bon Homme on the Class A volleyball map. "It's always been pretty competitive," senior Morgan Rothschadl said. "We've always had a good group of girls, but this year the chemistry is better than it's ever been.

That chemistry, combined with a positive attitude where the team tries to pinpoint certain things it did well from every match, has the Cavaliers feeling pretty confident. They haven't, however, rested on what they've done

so far this season, Fathke

"My thought is to never be satisfied, you can always find something to improve on," she said. "If you think you have everything mastered, you play relaxed."

Part of that cautious optimism stems from the fact that while Bon Homme boasts two wins over Wagner, it owns a loss to Region 5A leader Mount Vernon-Plankinton, which is 17-0. The only other Region 5A team Bon Homme will face during the regular season is Parkston (Oct. 20).

"We've played a lot of the teams in our region really close," Fathke said. "And no matter who we play down the road, we still have to come ready to play and know we can compete with everyone." And while the post-season is still nearly a month away, Bon Homme feels like it might just have the pieces in place to end that 16-year state tournament drought. "I really think we have a strong chance," Adams said. "We feel like it's our year to make it. We just have to come with positive attitudes and work hard every day.'
