ON THIS DATE

75 YEARS AGO

Saturday, October 5, 1940

Although the convention proper does not open until next Tuesday afternoon, it is expected there will be a considerable number of delegates and members of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of South Dakota in the city Monday afternoon and evening for a pre-convention session.

Indications are the work of setting up the machinery for the administration of the surplus food stamps plan in Yankton County will be started within the next two weeks.

50 YEARS AGO

Tuesday, October 5, 1965

The Gate City Guide, Inc., Rapid City, today filed articles of incorporation with Secretary of State Alma Larson. The newspaper listed authority to issue 1,000 shares of common stock at $100 a share.

Trail

The first is because of the two busy roadways – Highway 50 and West City Limits Road. After a certain point west of Walmart, the sidewalk runs out and people have had to resort to the highway's gutter or the curb line, which is not recommended.

"There isn't an easy way for pedestrians or people on bikes to access the commercial or residential area," Nelson said. "If we are looking to encourage people to walk or bike, we need to have safe places for them to do so."

Another reason for the city's trail expansion is the growing population on the west side of town, including the upcoming addition of Westbrook Estates.

"People like to see sidewalks along Highway 50 because of the foot traffic and bicycle traffic," Larson said. "It was a connection that needed to be made, sooner rather than later, because of all the development going on west."

The city's representatives are confident that, because of the community need, the state will approve grants for both of the final phases.

"The state wants to see people walking and biking," Larson said. "That helps their infrastructure of highways and bridges last longer because there is less use of it. We as the city like to see it, too, from a health stand point."

Since grant money has already been approved and designs for the project have begun, there is no rush on completing phase one until the city is informed on the outcome of phases two and three.

"That might hold back our first phase a little bit, but we might be further ahead and get more 'bang for our buck' by bidding out all the phases at once," Nelson said. "But the first step is really seeing what we are awarded and then making those decisions at that time."

If the city is not awarded grant funding for phases two and three, phase one will be constructed individually. The other two phases will be applied for in the next grant cycle.

"Eventually, this is a project we want to get done with or without grant funding," Nelson said. "But if we can leverage grant funds, of course, that is all for the better."

Each grant sought has been less than the $400,000 maximum, so the city could match a higher amount of 30 percent of grant money awarded. The goal is to get to the $800,000 - $900,000 range, which is what it would take to complete both phase two and three.

"The more matches you have, the more you are able to show a local investment in the began talking to Berkland, who they said has been a great help in housing people when the current facilities often reached capacity.

"To go from such limited space to having a lot of it, there will definitely be a learning curve," said Pastor Jon Cooke chair of the homeless shelter board. "You hope to learn from the mistakes you make, and hopefully, you don't make too many."

Members of the homeless shelter board were worried about raising the funds in time to purchase the Star Brite Inn. This was due to the United Way organization's fundraising season from September through October, of which the homeless shelter is heavily supportive.

Thanks to an offer from First Dakota National Bank, the shelter was able to secure a loan of $250,000 at a 0 percent interest rate. This covered the amount needed to complete the purchase agreement for the motel.

"They wanted to do that for us because they wanted to help us get into the shelter as quickly as we can," Cooke said. "That gives us some flexibility so we don't have to come up with the money right away. We can spread it out."

But with a new location comes new expenses, including the finances needed to maintain this larger facility. As a result, the homeless shelter board is currently developing a fundraising campaign beginning in November, once the United Way's campaign has concluded.

The goal for the campaign is between $350,000 and $400,000. This will be used to pay off that loan and could present opportunities for possible renovations.

Radio station 104.1 The Wolf has already begun work with the shelter on developing a commercial for the campaign. Specific event details are still being decided.

Members of the board also are working with a prospective buyer to sell their old facilities to cover some of the expenses. Finalization of the sale is expected once the move into the new facilities takes place.

"That buyer has been very cooperative to help us out and give us the time to make the project and the more competitive your allocation is," Nelson said.

The minimum match of a TAP grant is 18.4 percent. After the city had a 20 percent match on phase one's grant, administrators hope the increased match on grants for phase two and three will encourage the state to see the local dedication to the project.

Since phase two and three were applied for together, if the city receives funding for phase two and not phase three, the city will pay for phase two, the 30 percent match, and all of phase 3 in order to get it on the books and complete the project.

"That way, when we go back to the state in the future for other trails, we have evidence to say we have applied for trail grants before, you granted us funds for part of them and we finished those projects," Larson said.

City officials are currently awaiting approval on some last-minute agreements from the state for phase one. After these are approved, Larson thinks it should be easier to fast-track approvals for agreements on phases two and three.

The city has also taken advice from the state on the most effective ways to move forward. Yankton has had the money for the railroad underpass connection – north of W. 15th St. – and has been working at completing construction.

"We heard from the state that as long as we had that money sitting in the bank, until we get that project done, they were not going to look favorably on us applying for more trail funds," Larson said.

Larson believes that by the end of this fall, the railroad underpass project will be completed and the city can successfully apply for more grants.

Part of what made Yankton's grant applications so successful are the letters of support from community members. City staff reached out to people who utilized trails and sidewalks in the neighborhood, and they voiced their support by providing positive feedback on the project plans.

"That really helped so it's not just the local commissioners or staff saying we need grant money," Nelson said. "It is people in the community talking directly to the state and saying this is something we use and we value. We are keeping our fingers crossed and hoping the state sees that same value in the project that we do."

Because the city is awaiting approval of all three phases before beginning the project, officials don't foresee construction happening until early 2016 or, more realistically, 2017, and they hope to get things wrapped up in one construction season.

transition," Cooke said.

The campaign will also be a time for the shelter to revamp their target clientele and maximize their added space.

"The direction we are taking with our shelter is helping families and children," Miller said. "Our focus has been on caring for individual males. We hope to expand to work with our new capabilities."

Board members believe that by letting the community know about the increasing need, the public will be more inclined to show their support for the project.

"When we have the opportunity to really explain why we need this new facility, it startles people that we work with as many families with kids as we do," said Cooke. "It surprises people that children in this town are more vulnerable to homelessness than they realize."

This month will give shelter officials time to visualize their adaptation and move forward with their continued service to the community of Yankton.

"There won't be any lack in services from the move," Miller said. "Our objective is, as soon as we open the doors, we are open for business."

STREET TREE TRIMMING FREE DROP OFF

SOUTH DAKOTA

Yankton property owners are reminded to trim trees adjacent to sidewalks and streets. City Ordinance requires a 10 foot clearance over sidewalks and a 12 foot clearance over streets and alleys. Maintaining these clearances may take multiple trimmings annually. Low hanging tree branches reduce visibility for drivers, damage vehicles, make it difficult to clear streets, and damage snowplows and school buses.

Tree trimmings can be dropped off free of charge at the Transfer Station at 1200 West 23rd Street from 10/12/15 through 10/24/2015, 8:00 am - 3:45 pm, Monday-Saturday (excluding Monday & Thursday evenings).
