Conservatives Weigh In On Transgender Student Athletes

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) -Representatives of religious and conservative groups say the Nebraska School Activities Association should develop a policy on transgender student athletes that protects the "privacy and safety" of all students.

The high school activities group has yet to draft a policy on transgender students' participation in sports. Nebraska Catholic Conference and Nebraska Family Alliance representatives told the board it shouldn't allow transgender students to play in sports based on their gender prefer-ager A.J. Hinch said. "We've got some work to do to win this series. It's going to be a good series. These are two really good teams."

Two starters acquired with October in mind. Kazmir and Royals counterpart Johnny Cueto, pitched mostly to a stalemate Friday, which meant the outcome hinged on the bullpens. Kansas City's relief corps was simply better, preserving the first win by a home team this postseason.

at the expense of every other student," Bowling said. tura in Game 1 on Thursday night. Rasmus doubled in a run in the first inning, and Springer added a two-run knock in the second as restless Royals fans began to shower their ace with boos. Perez got one back for Kansas City with his homer to left in the bottom half, but Rasmus matched him with his third home run in three games this postseason. Cueto finally settled in, but it looked as if it would be too late. Kazmir allowed a run in the third, but otherwise had Kansas City off balance until the sixth inning. Still trailing 4-2, Lorenzo Cain got the Royals' tying rally started with a double, and Hinch called for Oliver Perez. He allowed back-toback singles and a walk to leave the bases loaded for Fields, who walked Salvador Perez on four pitches to tie the game.

speedy Carlos Gomez came in as a pinch-runner. Davis snapped a throw to Hosmer at first, and he neatly snagged it on one hop as Gomez made a dive back to the bag. Gomez was initially ruled safe, but the call was overturned upon review.

"That play that Hos made on the pickoff, I don't know if there's a lot of first basemen that can make that play," Royals manager Ned Yost said. "It was tremendous.'

Jose Altuve then grounded out to end it, giving Davis the save.

It was a crucial victory considering what awaits Kansas City in Game 3 on Sunday: Astros ace Dallas Keuchel, who was 15-0 at home this season. Edinson Volquez will start for Kansas City.

'We were in position to win that game. Their bullpen did a very good job of shutting us down," Astros man-

"They compete," said Salvador Perez, who homered for the Royals. "Pretty good stuff.

Colby Rasmus homered, doubled and drove in two runs for Houston becoming the first player in major league history with an extra-base hit in his first six postseason games. George Springer had a pair of RBIs after hitting a solo shot in the series opener.

"Just to let it slip away late is kind of a downer," Astros reliever Tony Sipp said. "We had a lead late and let it slip away. We had the momentum going.<sup>3</sup>

The Astros jumped on Cueto right from the start, just as they did Yordano Ven-

When the Royals took the lead the following inning, their shutdown bullpen made it stick.

"I'm happy we're going home," Hinch said. "We've got home-field advantage for the rest of this series. We have to take care of business in our own yard.'

Ohnesorge, the sophomore from Waunakee, Wis., respects the front seven of ISU, but understands the battle starts with their unit first.

"It's a good defense, we've watched a lot of film on them," Ohnesorge said. "We're just trying to improve ourselves mainly. [We want to] know what they're going to line up in, but we're trying to get our technique and effort down."

After having big time impact in the first three games, both Isaac Wallace and Jake Wieneke were limited against the NDSU defense.

Wallace ran the ball four times for 10 yards, and Wieneke was held to 3 catches for 39 yards. Quite the opposite from the start of the season.

program history.

But after going 123-87 in 18 seasons as the head coach here at South Dakota State, Stiegelmeier has grown familiar with the tough conference.

"There's no other way to do it in the Missouri Valley," Stiegelmeier said with a grin. "It's not like we go 'Darn it we've got a ranked opponent, we get up for everybody. Our measure, is how close we play to our potential. We want to play great football and that's the bottom line."
