Dave Says It Takes Two To Manage Finances

BY DAVE RAMSEY

Dear Dave,

I've spent most of my marriage not being a good husband and not being involved in our family finances. After being introduced to one of your programs at work, I realized how irresponsible I had been and went home to apologize and tell my wife about it. During this conversation I learned that we have about $80,000 in debt I didn't know about, plus $45,000 in debt on a new car and motorcycle I did know about. We also have a mortgage on our home. My wife apologized for making a mess of things, but it wasn't all her fault. She wasn't sneaking around spending and taking out debt, she just made mistakes and was afraid to tell me. Together, we make about $100,000 a year. Can you help us?

-Curtis

Dear Curtis,

I'm really glad you've made the decision to man up. That's a big step in the right direction for you and your marriage. To me, what you described is a lot different than her completely lying, hiding stuff, and actively having a financial affair the side. You weren't plugged in and she wasn't doing a good job, but she didn't have anyone to talk to about it. Things got worse, then she probably felt ashamed about how ugly it got and didn't want to tell anybody.

so to speak - on

Not counting your house, you've got about $125,000 in debt. You've got to look at all this with a $100,000 income and say, "What is the fastest way to clean up this dadgum mess?" That's going to mean beans and rice, rice and beans. That means a scorched-earth lifestyle and living on a budget, which also means you're not going out to eat, not going on vacations and you're going to start selling so much stuff motorcycle. Get into a couple of basic home. You can clean this up that fast, but you're going to have no life during that time.

The two of you have some relationship work to do also. It sounds like you've already started on that with you owning your part and her owning hers. The thing is not to blame. From this point forward you need to sit down together and make all of your decisions - financial and otherwise — together.

Trust me, if you're both willing, you can heal the math problem, the debt problem and the marriage problem all at the same time. It will be an amazing thing! -Dave

SDSU Student Wins Top Prize At National Design Competition

BROOKINGS - South Dakota State University student Levi James won the "Best of Show" award at the 45th annual University and College Designers Association's national design competition in Orlando.

James, a senior graphic design major from Vermillion, received the top prize from a pool of nearly 1,100 entries. Randy Clark, an associate professor in SDSU's School of Design, received a companion award for the class assignment category. James' work, "Alzheimer's," received the following comment from Richard Jividen, a juror. "The poster, designed by South Dakota State University student Levi James, jumped off the table and forced me to notice. And to come back for a second look. And a third. That's when it became clear. Levi created a brilliantly simple example of powerful, effective design. One color. One word. Great work!" This year was the first time of the 143 Awards of Excellence given. The following students received awards of excellence: Nathan Deis, Sioux Falls; Virginia Torzewski, Rochester, Minnesota; Yany Alvaro, Sioux Falls; Kirsten Mulmel, Yankton; Alli Nix, Sioux Falls; and Alyssa Anderson, Brookings. "As soon as we were given the assignment of a 'cause' poster to our class, I knew I wanted to create a poster about Alzheimer's. However, I didn't know how I could create a poster that would do it justice," said James, who also placed in the Dallas Society of Visual Communications 11th Annual Student Show. "Seeing that the Alzheimer's poster struck a chord with so many people is truly an emotional feeling. I am humbled to see people have found a personal connection with the poster and can so easily reflect on their own experiences. After meeting so many people, hearing their stories and feeling their support, I feel more inspired and motivated to design than I ever have before.' James is the son of Brad and Kari James.

South Dakota State entered the competition. State won more awards than any other institution. SDSU students garnered 6

USDA Seeks Applications For Renewable Energy And Energy Efficiency Loans And Grants

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Under Secretary Lisa Mensah encouraged rural small businesses to apply for loans and grants to support renewable energy and energy efficiency projects.

'Helping rural small businesses save money on energy costs strengthens their bottom line and helps the U.S. become more energy independent," Mensah said. "It also reduces our country's carbon footprint, which leads to a cleaner environment and a more secure energy future. USDA is accepting Rural Energy for America Program (REAP) applications for: 1) loans and grants for renewable energy systems and energy efficiency improvements, and 2) grants for energy audits and renewable energy development assistance.

ral small businesses may use REAP funds to purchase and install renewable energy systems and make energy efficiency improvements. Eligible renewable energy systems include energy from wind, solar, renewable biomass (including anaerobic digesters), small hydro-electric, ocean, geothermal or hydrogen derived from

Farm Bill builds on historic economic gains in rural America over the past seven years while achieving meaningful reform and billions of dollars in savings for taxpayers

Through the REAP program, USDA has supported nearly 11,000 renewable energy and energy efficiency projects

Former Knox Co. Sheriff Honored By Association

CENTER, Neb. — A former Knox County sheriff has been inducted into the Nebraska Sheriffs' Association Hall of Fame.

Wesley E. Eisenbeiss was inducted into the shrine Oct. 6. He was a member of the Knox County Sheriff's Office his entire career.

He served as a deputty from 1963 to 1982, then as sheriff from 1983 to 2003, for a total of 40 years.

Eisenbeiss was instrumental in getting a NCIC/ NCIS teletype terminal at the Sheriff's Office in the 1980s as well as a sound radio communication system across the county for both officer's safety and fast efficient handling of fire/rescue and law enforcement calls.

He started a tradition at the Knox County Fair of having his office fingerprint children. The parents were given the print cards to keep and the children were given a sack of goodies. This is still being done at the fair every year.

During the mid 1980s when five Knox County banks were closed in one day by FDIC, Eisenbeiss was able to wade through hundreds of foreclosures on Knox County residents, mostly farmers and ranchers, and see that the peace was kept and people were treated fairly during the potentially violent times. Because of his fairness towards all people, the Santee Sioux asked Eisenbeiss if he would take over law enforcement on the reservation especially Santee, Nebraska. At that time the tribe had not retroceded and law enforcement was covered by Public Law 280. In other words there was no BIA or Tribal Police, the Sheriff's Office was it. Eisenbeiss accepted the challenge and entered into contractual law enforcement from the mid 1980s until the early 2000s when the tribe retroceded and a Tribal Police Department was established. By the way, that department has a close working relationship with the Knox County Sheriff's Office and we still work with them daily.

Eisenbeiss, who passed away in 2010, was nominated by County Attorney John Thomas, Verdigre Chief of Police Dean E. Wavrunek, Retired Sheriff Jim Janecek and current Sheriff Don Henery.

The plaque in his honor was accepted by his surviving daughters Brenda (Danny) Sage and Lori Sackville.

Eligible agricultural producers and ru-these renewable resources.

Energy audits and renewable energy development assistance grants are available to state, tribal or local governments; institutions of higher education; rural electric cooperatives and public power entities.

The REAP program was created in the 2002 Farm Bill. Because of the success of the program, Congress reauthorized it in the 2014 Farm Bill with guaranteed funding of no less than $50 million annually for the duration of the five-year bill. The 2014 nationwide since the start of the Obama Administration. The Department has provided more than $367 million in grants and $354 million in loan guarantees to agricultural producers and rural small business owners during this period.

For application deadlines and details on how to apply in South Dakota, contact Darlene Bresson, USDA Rural Development Energy Coordinator at darlene. bresson@sd.usda.gov, (605) 886-8202, Ext. 120, or see Page 60349 of the Oct. 6 Federal Register.

SD GFP Reminds Hunters That Some CREP Areas May Be Hayed

PIERRE — As pheasant hunting hits full stride in South Dakota, hunters may find some Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program (CREP) areas with less than anticipated cover conditions. Due to a stipulation in the Conservation Reserve Program contracts, landowners are required to conduct midcontract management (haying in most cases) on CREP acres.

'This is an important management requirement by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA)," said Game, Fish and Parks (GFP) Wildlife Biologist Mark Norton. "The CREP partnership between the USDA and GFP has made over 80,000 acres of quality habitat available for public hunting. Managing the habitat is a necessary and mandatory part of the process.'

While some hunters may be discouraged that last year's "honey hole" has been hayed, Norton explains the midcontract management practice will ultimately improve future habitat conditions.

While these land management practices – haying, light disking or harrowing – cause a short-term and temporary loss of hunting opportunity, in the long run these practices result in higher quality wildlife habitat and improved hunting opportunities. The most common management practice will be one half of the CREP area hayed one year, and next year the other half. 'This year is one of the first years that many CREP acres fall within the required time period of mid-contract management. Next year, expect to see over half of the CREP areas with reduced cover conditions as these will also be eligible for mid-contract management."

Norton urges hunters to scout ahead of time, if possible, to ensure they aren't surprised on opening day.
