Wind Farm Ordinance Considered Tuesday

BY RANDY DOCKENDORF
randy.dockendorf@yankton.net

TYNDALL — The Bon Homme County commissioners are scheduled to decide next week the fate of a proposed wind energy ordinance.

The agenda for Tuesday's regular commission meeting includes the second reading of Article 17, said Auditor Tammy Brunken. She will finalize the agenda — including the tentative time for action on Article 17 — by 9 a.m. Monday so it can be posted for public inspection 24 hours before the meeting.

"(Article 17) will be up for discussion at the meeting," she said. "(The commissioners) can make changes up until the second reading. However, (the ordinance) becomes finalized once it receives the second reading and is approved."

Currently, Bon Homme County's zoning ordinance doesn't address wind energy systems, Brunken said.

The recently-constructed Beethoven wind farm lies in Bon Homme, Hutchinson and Charles Mix counties. Last month, NorthWestern Energy finalized its purchase of the 80-megawatt Beethoven wind project located near Tripp. NorthWestern purchased the wind farm from BayWa r.e. Wind LLC for $143 million.

"I talked to a NorthWestern (official), and they purchased the Beethoven site because it fit into their portfolio. They need so much 'green' energy," said Bon Homme County Commission Chairman Russ Jelsma.

Beethoven would be grandfathered under the passage of a new Bon Homme County wind energy ordinance, Brunken said.

Now, the proposed Prevailing Winds farm would be constructed near the Beethoven operation in Charles Mix and Bon Homme counties, according to Prevailing Winds president Ronnie Hornstra of Avon. The wind farm could generate 200 megawatts of energy, he said.

Prevailing Winds would fall under a new Bon Homme wind energy ordinance, Brunken said.

"Article 17 was prompted when there was some discussion by a company that wanted to come in and install more wind towers," she said. "There was some discussion by people who were not in favor of it, so the zoning board chose to review the zoning ordinance and try to work with it."

At Tuesday's meeting, passage of the proposed ordinance requires a simple majority of the commissioners, Brunken said. The action requires a roll call vote.

Brian McGinnis with the District III Planning and Development office in Yankton has worked with Bon Homme County officials on drafting the proposed wind energy ordinance, Brunken said.

Last week, the commissioners unanimously approved the first reading of Article 17. The commission consists of Jelsma, Mike Soukup, John Fathe, John Hauck and Duane Bachmann.

The vote came after 1 hour and 40 minutes of public testimony. The meeting was moved to the courtroom to accommodate the nearly 100 persons who packed the room.

The main point at last week's hearing dealt with setbacks for wind farms. The ordinance calls for setbacks of 1,000 feet near residences and 500 feet near property lines.

Opponents indicated they wanted stricter regulations, including longer setbacks, if not an outright ban on wind farms.

In the end, the commissioners voted to approve the ordinance as recommended by the county zoning board.

The public testimony brought a wide range of data and opinion, with the discussion becoming passionate at times.
