Parking Restrictions In Place During Ribfest Saturday

Parking restrictions in the downtown Yankton area will be implemented on the night before the annual Rockin' Ribfest on Sept. 18.

There will be no parking in the Ribfest Event Area on Third St., from east of the alley between Broadway and Cedar Street to Douglas Avenue, east of the Douglas Avenue and Third Street intersection until Capitol Street, and north of Third Street on Walnut Street from 3 a.m. Sept. 18 until approximately midnight of the same date. Motorists are asked to remove your vehicle prior to this time.

Call 605-260-3003 or visit downtownyankton.com for more information.

Volunteers Needed For Fourth Annual Ribfest

Volunteers are needed for the fourth annual Rockin' Ribfest on Saturday, Sept. 18, in Historic Downtown Yankton, running from 11 a.m.-11 p.m.

Rockin' Ribfest has volunteer opportunities in the Information booth/souvenir sales, kids' area, garbage and tear down areas. Shifts are two hours unless otherwise requested.

If you are interested in volunteering or more details about the volunteer areas, e-mail Lori at yhrd@iw.net or call 260-3003.

Judy Mace, Tyndall, who showed her work at the art show, noted she had seen more people in the first morning of the show than she had in the two days of a previous year.

Twin Rivers Old Iron Association, formed seven years ago, started out with several demonstrations at the rear of the Legion Hall during the Kuchen Festival. When the members were able to purchase the farm on the west edge of Delmont, their work began in earnest to transform it into a second festival site.

"There now are about 80 members from the area, from Letcher to Wagner to Marion to Mitchell to Delmont," said President Glennis Stern.

They are men who remember the farming practices of their youth and their fathers and grandfathers. Usually their wives also are active in the festival, providing the food that is sold, as well as helping with such things as the barrel train that choo-chooed around the grounds this year for the first time, delighting the youngsters.

There also was a pile of sand with coins to be retrieved, and a pedal pull event just for them.

For the adults, much is done with horse teams or what are now collector tractors and equipment. They also were featured in a tractor pull, watched by a crowd seated on the new bleachers.

Dennis Pietz, Mitchell, who retired from farming southeast of Tripp some years ago, now finds satisfaction in training horse teams — five in the last five years, he said. The current team, Deb and Dee, two black paints, were equally comfortable drawing a wagon full of people around the farm and through town, or doing the heavy work on the farm.

The grain from the threshing machine was in the wagon hauled by the horses. Then the horses were unhooked from the wagon and hooked to the wheel that they turned providing the power for the elevator.

It was a successful weekend, said Stern, but for members, there was more work ahead.

"Tomorrow," said Stern, laughing ruefully, "we are going to have to put all this stuff away."

BUTTS

beautify the downtown area, and I feel that these stands have done that," Perakslis said. "We also made sure that we placed each one near a trash can so that people would not use these as litter boxes."

Perakslis said that without the help of Greg Kopetsky of Kopetsky's Ace Hardware, the project would not have been accomplished.

"(Greg) is doing the install for us and making sure they will be ready to go," she said. "Bohler Printing is doing posters for us so we can put them in the businesses downtown and let people know where they are."

The posters and flyers, which businesses can use to tell customers where the stations are located, is admittedly aimed at the younger smokers.

"We find that older smokers tend to be more conscientious about where they are disposing of their butts, so we knew we wanted our posters to be very fun and non-confrontational," Perakslis said. "The 'Park Your Butts Here' slogan is catchy and lets people know we care about them — that we know they care about the environment and have not had a lot of options for safe and proper disposal of their cigarette butts, just like the sign says. This gives them that option."

The placement locations of the five containers was chosen to address where the most need was seen at this point.

"We tried to place the five containers in the places where they will get the most use. We are putting one outside Riverfront Event Center. We are putting others right outside bars on Third Street as well as one in front of the Ice House and the theatre because that is where a lot of the cigarette waste has been found."

Perakslis added that businesses at those locations have done a good job trying to keep the waste to a minimum, but bars, drinking and cigarettes go hand in hand. She added that the businesses have supported installing the new stations.

Perakslis said there is a possibility that KYB will be able to qualify for an extension on the grant next year.

"If we can prove that there are fewer butts on the ground and people are using (the containers), we could be in line for a grant extension and get more next year," she said. "Each of the stands cost $257 before shipping. So it is something we hope to qualify for again."

TAX

Boehner's change in position and support for the middle class tax cuts, but time will tell if his actions will be anything but continued support for the failed policies that got us into this mess."

Boehner responded to that press release with one of his own. "Instead of resorting to tired old class warfare rhetoric, pitting one working American against another, the president and the Democratic leadership should start working with us this week to ensure a fair and open debate to pass legislation to cut spending and freeze tax rates without any further delay," he said.

Austan Goolsbee, new chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, said on ABC's "This Week" that he hopes that Democratic lawmakers who also want an across-the-board extension will join Obama and others in the party in supporting legislation aimed at the middle class before the November elections.

In response to Boehner's initial comments, Goolsbee said, "If he's for that, I would be happy."

With congressional elections less than two months away, both parties have been working to score points with voters generally unhappy with Congress. Democrats are bearing the brunt of voter anger over a stubborn recession, a weak job market and a high-spending government, giving the GOP an opening for taking back control of the House and possibly the Senate.

Democratic leaders would relish putting up a bill that extends only the middle-class tax cuts and then daring Republicans to oppose it. In response, GOP lawmakers probably would try to force votes on amendments to extend all the tax cuts, arguing that it would be a boost to the economy, and then point to those who rejected them.

A compromise over the tax-cut extensions had been suggested by some senior Democrats. In a speech last week in Cleveland, Obama rejected the idea of temporarily extending all the tax cuts for one to two years.

The tax-cut argument between Obama and Republican lawmakers focuses on whether the debt-ridden country can afford to continue Bush's tax breaks, which were designed to expire next year. Republicans contend that cutting back on government spending ought to be the focus of efforts aimed at beginning to balance the federal budget.

If Republicans regain control of the House, they would remove Democrat Nancy Pelosi of California as speaker, a position that is second in line to the presidency after the vice president. Boehner would be the most likely successor, and he already is the focus of criticism from the Democrats' re-election campaign.

Obama himself has been leading the charge against Boehner, traveling last week to the Republican minority leader's home state to accuse him of offering little but stale ideas that led to the economic meltdown.

In keeping with that tactic, the Democratic National Committee said Sunday it plans to begin airing an ad Tuesday in Washington and on national cable that portrays Boehner as a supporter of tax cuts for the wealthy and a foe of spending for teachers, police officers and firefighters.

"Boehner has a different plan," the ad states. "Tax cuts for businesses and those that shift jobs and profits overseas. Saving multinational corporations 10 billion."
