USD

"We have over 1,000 strong in our freshman class, which is 8.35 percent over last year," he said. "And we just had our graduate school numbers increase by 19.29 percent. That has been an area of growth for us, and I am very pleased with that number."

USD has also succeeded in retaining more students, which Abbott has listed as a major goal.

"Our freshman-to-sophomore rate is almost 75 percent, compared to 68 percent just three or four years ago," he said. USD has not encountered problems accommodating the larger number of students, Abbott said. The university has begun offering more housing options, including this fall's opening of the Coyote Village apartment complex offering suite-like accommodations.

Coyote Village has reached 60 percent occupancy, higher than the initial projections of 50 percent for the first year, Abbott said.

Other figures released Tuesday show USD enrolling 6,316 women and 3,835 men. The Vermillion school, which lies in the corner of a tri-state area, also enrolls 7,333 South Dakotans and 2,818 non-resident students.

Since 2003, total enrollment at USD has increased from 7,917 students to 10,151. The significant increase in total enrollment over the eight-year period can be attributed to various dynamics, according to Jeff Baylor, vice president of marketing.

South Dakota State University, which like USD has moved to NCAA Division I, recorded its 11th consecutive year of record enrollment dating back to 8,540 in 1999.

Another record freshman class and increased numbers of graduate students boosted fall 2010 enrollment at the Brookings school to 12,816 students.

The numbers include 2,247 new freshmen and a record 1,475 graduate students. The totals also include an 8 percent increase in students enrolled in Ph.D. programs from last year and a 32 percent increase from 2008.

The strong numbers reflect enrollment projections at the state's largest, most comprehensive university, according to President David Chicoine.

"The keys to sustained, strategic growth at South Dakota State are recruitment of new students, retention of students from the previous year and enrollment of graduate students," the Elk Point native said. "Today's report indicates the university's initiatives in those areas are working well."

SDSU has seen continued growth of full-time, degree-seeking students pursuing their education on the main campus, Chicoine said.

Approximately 42 percent of the new students scored a 24 or higher on the ACT entrance examination, qualifying them for a Jackrabbit Guarantee Scholarship. South Dakotans comprise almost 67 percent of the student body at SDSU.

The record enrollments are all about being responsive to South Dakota's workforce needs, Warner said. The Regents have phased out low-enrolled programs, investing those resources in new and continuing programs, he said.

Besides its programs, the state's public universities have sought to offer better facilities, he said.

"We have taken some pains to invest in the infrastructure of our campuses to make them more attractive than they have ever been, which creates a magnet for students," he said.

South Dakota's public universities have sought to strengthen their ties with the state's residents, Chicoine said.

Chicoine said he didn't know if this year's statewide bus tours of SDSU students, staff and administrators contributed to enrollment gains. However, he said the tour and other efforts have allowed SDSU officials to gain feedback from South Dakotans and become more familiar with different parts of the state.

The face-to-face meetings also provide a chance for South Dakotans to become fully aware of the opportunities offered by higher education, Chicoine said.

"Like President Abbott said, we are in the business of building a better South Dakota," he added.
