Even A Novice Can Do This Replacement

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI
www.cartalk.com

Dear Tom and Ray:

My mechanic asked for $99 to replace the cabin air filter on my 2003 Subaru Outback. Apparently, this needs to be done every year. I decided to do it myself, but after searching online for the filter, which is available for about $20, I was surprised by the lack of step-by-step instructions and the comments to the effect that it is a real project just to access the darn thing. While I'm fairly handy with tools, I'm now thinking that rather than being the first in my neighborhood to try to sell a car with the dashboard in pieces, maybe you guys have some advice on whether this is a do-it-yourself job, or whether I should slink back to my mechanic, pretend we never discussed this before and ask him to do it. Thanks.

— Pat

TOM: You can handle this, Pat.

RAY: Some cabin air filters ARE notoriously difficult to get at. In fact, I once spoke to a mechanic who told me that at his dealership, they never even did it. Even though a service order called for it, it was such a colossal, hour-and-a-half, pain-in-the-butt job that they'd just mark it as changed and throw the new filter in the trash can.

TOM: That's awful. But it's really the fault of the manufacturer. It probably felt the competitive need to have a cabin air filter, since other car makers were advertising it. So it told its engineers to put one in the ventilation system. The engineers crammed it in the best they could, but there was no real thought given to the poor schmoe who'd have to fight their way in and change the thing!

RAY: Anyway, luckily for you, Pat, your car is not one of those. The cabin air filter on your '03 Outback sits right behind the glove box. So all you have to do is pop out four screws and remove the glove box, and the filter housing should be right there in plain sight. It's a 10-minute job — for me. For you, two hours.

TOM: And even if you can't handle it, you'll only have to sell the car with the glove box hanging out, not with the entire dashboard in pieces. Good luck.

Koupal, who is now the communications coordinator for Centennial Student Union at Minnesota State University, Mankato.

"Mount Marty was a special place to work, and it was due to the people who were there."

Marty built his home in Yankton in 1883 after deciding to make the community his Episcopal see. He had been born in Switzerland in 1834 and was ordained as a priest at age 23. Sent to the United States in 1860, Marty eventually felt the need to do missionary work among Native American tribes. He became the only bishop to ever serve Dakota Territory. In 1889, he chose to move his headquarters to Sioux Falls.

The Sisters of Saint Benedict moved their motherhouse to Yankton in 1889. Marty invited the nuns to live in an academy building constructed by the Sisters of Mercy, who had left the community.

The Benedictines would go on to open Sacred Heart Hospital in 1897.

The monastery founded Mount Marty College, a Catholic Benedictine liberal arts institution in 1936. It began as a junior college for females and went on to award its first bachelor of arts and bachelor of science degrees in 1951. It expanded its enrollment to include men in 1969.

While writing the play about Marty more than 20 years ago, Koupal said he was inspired by the bishop's zeal for missionary work and spreading the Word of God.

"He had an enthusiasm for this kind of work," he stated. "At one point, he says, 'God has given me the urge to do what nobody else wanted to ...' He felt that this truly was a mission that he was destined for."

Marty was one of the formative figures in the state and happened to be about the same size as Koupal — 5-foot 9-inches and 140 pounds. Koupal said Marty was a perfect vehicle for him and the college to play a role in the centennial celebrations of 1989.

"We wanted our students and our community to know about Bishop Marty," Koupal said. "We wanted them to know why Mount Marty is called that and why Bishop Marty Chapel is such a grand building. It was all due to this man who changed and set the whole climate of Catholicism in North and South Dakota."

The show was written based on research done by various historians, as well as letters that were written by Marty himself.

Koupal said he hasn't performed the piece in about 10 years, but he is looking forward to revisiting the character of a man who did so much to shape South Dakota history. He hopes a Yankton audience is ready to do the same.

"If you want to get to the true legacy of Mount Marty, it goes beyond 75 years. It dates back to the mid-1800s," Koupal said. "It's a legacy that was started by this man and is continued through the work of religious and lay people who carry on the mission of Mount Marty."

Earlier Monday, the college's official opening Mass will be celebrated in Bishop Marty Memorial Chapel with Archabbot Justin DuVall of St. Meinrad's Archabbey presiding and providing the homily. St. Meinrad's is Marty's home abbey. The ceremony begins at 11 a.m.

Sheila Kuchta, director of marketing and college relations for Mount Marty, said the institution is looking forward to celebrating its 75 anniversary with events throughout the academic year that the public is welcome to attend.

"We hope that people in the community who haven't had a chance to come up to Mount Marty College take advantage of some of the things we have going on this year and experience what it has to offer," she said.

Bob Tereshinski, Mount Marty's vice president and dean of academic affairs, said the school has a lot to celebrate.

"I hope Mount Marty has provided a legacy of successful graduates that have established the foundation for the growth and development of professional businesses in our community," he said. "In the future, we hope to show the community how important the college is to providing a professional workforce to serve Yankton and the surrounding region."

unemployment rate among states for the 15th straight month. The rate there rose from 12.9 percent in July to 13.4 percent in August. The state has been hampered by foreclosures, a depressed construction industry and a decline in tourism.

California had the second-highest rate, at 12.1 percent, followed by Michigan, at 11.2 percent.

North Dakota had the nation's lowest unemployment rate, at 3.5 percent. That's up from 3.3 percent in July. Booming oil, agriculture and manufacturing industries have helped the state keep the lowest unemployment rate since November 2008.

It was followed by Nebraska (4.2 percent) and South Dakota (4.7 percent).

In August, 30 states and the District of Columbia reported job losses. New York lost 22,700 net jobs to lead the nation. It was followed by Georgia, with 18,200 lost jobs, and the District of Columbia, with 12,500 fewer jobs. Both Georgia and D.C. saw big declines in government jobs.

Minnesota posted the biggest job gain in August: 28,400. But that was mainly because the state rehired workers who were temporarily laid off during the government's July shut-down.

North Carolina added 16,500 net jobs, the second highest. Arizona had 15,400 more jobs. Both states added public workers after governments shed thousands of employees.
