The "Nevermind" box presents the remastered original album with lots of mostly superfluous trimmings. The best of the bonus tracks — such as a muscular take on the Velvet Underground's "Here She Comes Now" — have already appeared on other compilations. The extras include selections from the first Vig demo session in 1990 with Grohl's predecessor on drums, Chad Channing, and a handful of B-sides and other rarities. Make no mistake, the original album is stellar, but if you already own it and some of the posthumous Nirvana collections that have flooded the market in the last decade, "Super Deluxe" is an expensive indulgence more suited for completists than the casual fan.

The must-hear part of the box is a live recording of a Seattle concert in October 1991. It captures a great band at the peak of its powers on a tour of venues far smaller than it could have filled as its popularity skyrocketed. Whether ranting at rednecks while introducing a harrowing, as-yet-unrecorded song, "Rape Me"; belching out the lovesick "Nevermind" outtake "Aneurysm"; or unveiling a tender cover of the Vaselines' "Jesus Doesn't Want Me for a Sunbeam," Cobain sounds like an artist who knows it's his moment, and he owns it. Novoselic and Grohl don't so much back up Cobain as demand that he keep up; Grohl in particular gives the drums a major voice in the songs, his fills and accents nearly as recognizable as the melodies themselves.

Like the rest of the rock world, Pearl Jam initially was left in the dust by Nirvana and "Nevermind." But they hit the road hard in the wake of "Ten's" release, and "Pearl Jam 20" highlights the group's growth on stage. Eddie Vedder pushes his voice to the breaking point on live versions of "Blood," "Alive" and "Not For You." The band is sloppier, looser than Nirvana, blowing out the songs with guitar solos. Pearl Jam's reference points were the bombast of '70s arena rock as much as the '80s Seattle punk scene from which co-founders Jeff Ament and Stone Gossard emerged.

But as "20" makes clear, Pearl Jam grew impressively into its sudden popularity, and live takes on "Release Me," "Better Man," "Rearviewmirror" and "Nothing as It Seems" surpass the studio originals. Even more illuminating is a stripped-down demo of the latter song, with a haunting arrangement by Ament, and guitarist Mike McCready's acoustic "Given to Fly." When the band underplays a bit, it's captivating. Pearl Jam was typecast as the corporate pretenders to Nirvana's punk darlings in the Seattle hierarchy circa 1991, but they've not only endured but grown as a band — a case concisely made by the "Pearl Jam 20" soundtrack.

death march the past few years with ridiculous storylines and plot devices that seemed aimed at the heart of the show, destroying the things that had made the show great and eroding the fan base. Intentionally or not, AMC seemed determined to kill it, putting the characters in situations contrary to their histories, then simply dropping the plot without explanation and moving onto another ill-advised storyline. When they managed to reverse Erica's 1973 abortion, they almost lost me.

The producers fiddled and tampered with the show, trying, it seemed, to change soaps into daytime versions of prime time shows. It hasn't worked because soaps have never been about special effects, camera angles or special musical guests. They've been about storytelling.

They are about people and circumstances, and situations and passions, not all of the bedroom variety. "All My Children" thrived inside the pregnant pause and plunged the characters off the steepest of cliffhangers.

And at 1 p.m. (ET) Friday, it will be gone.

Like many a soap character, it has died too young. Besides, soaps are supposed to go on forever. There is always a "stayed tuned to-morrow," always another chapter in the story, always that moment of tension that won't be resolved until the next day. How can "All My Children" just end?

I'm at a point in my life when there is too much change — in my job, in my industry, in my life. I had thought "All My Children" would be my constant, the one thing that I could count on, give or take a few pre-emptions.

I won't die if I don't get to see what new plot David comes up with, or whether Dixie and Tad finally will make a go of it, or how Jesse and Angie will cope with the loss of their child. The world will keep turning; life will keep changing. But I'll miss them.

I'll miss that one hour each day that I spent in their company.

So long, Pine Valley. It's been a pleasure.
